Tornado hits Granite City avoids SIUE, Edwardsville

Students wait in basement of University Center for thirty minutes during storm.

■ BY DANIELLE
BELTON
EDITOR IN CHIEF

Students and staff were ushered into the basement of the University Center as tornado sirens sounded Monday afternoon.

A series of severe weather warnings were reported throughout Southwestern Missouri and Southern Illinois as several tornados hit counties in Missouri and Illinois.

The tornado was reported over the radio to have hit in Granite City and St. Louis. At press time, there were no actual reported hits in Edwardsville.

The alarms sounded on the campus around 6 p.m. All people present in the building were ordered to go downstairs towards the back of the building near the bowling alley. Approximately 40 people waited in the recreational area of the University Center till the building engineer confirmed that the emergency was over.

Some students sat against the walls and waited, while others gathered around the television set to watch the news updates.

The electricity went off briefly, but returned to power in less than a minute.

Around 6:30 p.m., students were alerted by the building engineer, Patrick Kelly, that the worst was over, and that they could leave.

Some were frightened by the circumstances, but almost all were pleased with the university staff's quick and calm thinking.

Cheryl Heard, assistant director of the Kimmel Leadership Center, was in the University Center at the time of the severe weather warning and was impressed by the staff's quick thinking.

"I felt the evacuation was well performed," Heard said.

SIUE offers journalism workshops for children, gives young students journalistic experience

■ BY DOREEN VAN
LEE
NEWS STRINGER

Parents, do you think your child may be the next Oprah Winfrey, Jerry Springer, Ernest Hemingway or Stephen King? If so, SIUE is offering two enriching activities which are geared toward children 10 to 18 years old.

For children who show talent and interest in writing and reporting, a summer journalism camp is being offered. This camp will take place from July 20 through July 21 for children age 13 to 18.

Classes will be held Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. Students will get hands-on instruction in photojournalism as well as newspaper design and television production.

This workshop is devised to strengthen student's writing and reporting skills as well as enrich their knowledge of the media. For more information on registration, call (618) 692-5628 or (618) 692-2660. Registration is limited to 50 students and there is a fee of $75.

For the child who loves to always be in front of the camera, a summer television production workshop is being offered. This workshop will take place June 15 through July 13 from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. Monday through Friday, for students age 10 to 15. This workshop is designed to give students a firsthand opportunity to learn how news and advertisements are produced. Included in the workshop will be a newscast, complete with live commercials. The fee for this workshop is $75.

If you are interested in learning more about this workshop, contact Cynthia Cooper or Judy Landers at (618) 692-2237.

Social work professor wins Social Worker of the Year Award

■ BY ZHANDA
JOHNSON
NEWS EDITOR

Carol Wesley, assistant professor in the department of Social Work has been named Social Worker of the Year by the Metro-East St. Louis District of the National Association of Social Workers.

Wesley is a licensed and certified clinical social worker who earned a certificate in gerontology from St. Louis University (SLU) in 1975. She earned a bachelor's degree in psychology at what was then known as Sangamon State University in Springfield and a master's in social work at SLU. Wesley also received a doctorate from SLU and a master of divinity from the Aquinas Institute of Theology located on the SLU campus.

Wesley has been associated with SIUE since 1996. She is the practicum director for the department of social work. As director she works closely with students and also works with various agencies in the area offering social services to the population in public and community-based programs.

Wesley is receiving the Social Worker of The Year Award because of her dedication and efforts in the profession of social work through academic leadership, excellence in teaching aimed toward the development of future social work professions, and for responding to the needs of students by helping to organize SIUE's first "Social Work Practicum Fair" which was held earlier this year at the Gateway Convention Center in Collinsville, Ill.

This year the social work profession is celebrating its 100th anniversary which means receiving this award will be especially noteworthy.

Eagle Scouts, athletes, honor students charged with trashing house

LEAWOOD, Kan. (AP) — They came from both sides of the Missouri-Kansas line: Eagle Scouts, athletes, honor roll students at some of the Kansas City area's most prestigious high schools.

Now, these "good kids" are among those accused of involvement in an incident of almost incredible vandalism at a luxury home in this affluent suburb. And at least some could face jail time if convicted.

So far, 14 young people have been charged in connection with the beer party that drew almost 200 people to a vacant $300,000 home last month. By the time police broke it up, the damage ran to an estimated $70,000.

Walls were broken out, windows and other glass shattered. Paint was sprayed on walls, floors and carpeting.

Ten of the 14 had surrendered by Saturday on charges of burglary and criminal damage to property. The investigation continues, and police expect 10 to 15 more people to be charged.

"For the most part they are good kids who got involved in a situation that many of our high school and college students face today," said Leawood police Sgt. Craig Hill. "It just got out of hand."

Hill added, however, "There are no ifs, ands or buts about it. What they did was against the law. There is no excuse for it."

Those charged — 13 males, one female — range in age from 16 to 22. They live in Overland Park, Leawood, Lenexa and Prairie Village on the Kansas side, and in Kansas City, Independence and Lee's Summit in Missouri.

Police have learned that many at the party were students at Rockhurst High School, a prestigious Jesuit school in Kansas City, Mo., and at Shawnee Mission East High School in affluent Johnson County, Kan.

Another is from Grandview High School in Missouri. Several students from St. Thomas Aquinas and Notre Dame de Sion high schools also attended the party, along with several college students.

Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison has said he would seek jail time for those responsible for organizing the party.

Hill, supervisor of the Leawood Police Department's investigations unit, has talked to many of the students and their parents. While a few parents have been defensive and in denial about their children's involvement, Hill said, most are upset, concerned and sorry.

"And they're not going to cut their kids any slack," he said. "They are truly upset about what happened."

Hill said the incident shouldn't be a reflection on any particular school. Young people in any city in the country take part in large beer parties, he said.

Officials at Rockhurst High School are taking the allegations seriously.

"I know a lot of schools would prefer to just turn their backs on it," said the Rev. Thomas Pesci, president of the Jesuit prep school. "We will be taking disciplinary action next week."

Pesci said he didn't yet know the number or extent of Rockhurst students' involvement, and could not say what punishments might be given.

"I'm sure when all is said and done, there will be a whole range of disciplinary actions taken," including probation, suspension and, possibly, expulsion, he said.

Rockhurst students, too, are taking the incident to heart.

"Sometimes it seems the bad choices made by a few people reflect on everyone and that's sad," said Timothy G. Haake, president of the Rockhurst student council. "Rockhurst teaches us to be responsible for our actions and to be proud of them. No one thinks this situation is funny, and anyone involved needs to pay the consequences."

Public school students in Kansas who are accused of felonious conduct off school property can be suspended or expelled, said Donna Whiteman, an attorney for the Kansas Association of School Boards. But until students are convicted in court, the burden of proof for expulsion would lie with the school districts.

Once convicted of felonies, students can be expelled.

Hill said he hoped young people and parents would learn lessons from the incident.

"Some of the students I've talked to say they'll never attend another party like that," Hill said. "They don't want to go through what they see these kids going through."

At the vandalized house, carpenter Walter Johnson was patching walls in the living room Friday. He and his crew spent last week plugging holes, including one created with a small sailboat that still lies on the floor.

Upstairs, the cigarette butts have been picked out of the marble bathtub. Broken windows have been boarded up, and some spray-painted images are gone. New carpet has been ordered for the ravaged basement.

"We've been doing a little bit of this here and there," Johnson said. "But there's still a lot more work to be done."

Big capitalist, little capitalist: News Corporation V. Bad Boy

Reginald Jones might be discussing the wrong capitalist in his speech.

Danielle
Belton

When walking across the Quadrangle a few days ago, I noticed a sign written in chalk on the pavement that screamed the question, "Why is Puff Daddy a Capitalist?" And the first thing that popped into my mind was, when did Mr. Sean "Puffy" Combs become the definition of capitalism in America? Why Puff Daddy?

I'm sure he was chosen to gain an African-American audience. After all, the function is being sponsored by the College Republicans and is affiliated with another young conservative organization. Both not exactly known for rousing up the black population of our campus. Being that Puffy would be a more recognizable name, versus another capitalist like media mogul, Rupert Murdoch, is probably why it was chosen for the title of Reginald Jones's lecture.

The only problem I had with the title was the Puff Daddy part. If Bad Boy records went under tomorrow, there would be no strikes, no picketing, no substantial layoffs that would harm the American economy, no dip in the Dow Jones, it would be lucky if it even got printed in the Alestle. But if Rupert Murdoch decided he was selling his news corporation empire (consisting of hundreds of media outlets including the Fox television network, 20th Century Fox, and the New York Post) it would be on every television set in the nation, economists would estimate how this selling of such large influence and stature would effect American's and how they get their news.

Puff Daddy may be a capitalist, but he's not a very important one. He's not one anyone should be worried about, he doesn't even impress me. Don't get me wrong, I have respect for anyone who is able to succeed in our democratic/capitalist society which involves the ongoing rule that the rich must stay rich and the poor must stay poor in order for it to work.

I'm actually quite curious as to what Reginald Jones has to say, though I have a slight feeling I probably won't agree with him, being I've heard some of his views before. But I believe that they are worth listening to. We all should see what the opposing viewpoint has to say once and a while. It might give me something to write about. But I suggest that everyone be skeptical. Always take all information with a grain of salt. That way you'll know the difference between a person surviving and succeeding in a capitalist society (Sean Combs) versus a person with power and influence in a capitalist society (Rupert Murdoch). Make sure you always know who the real money makers are, and sleep with one eye open.

Editor's note:

Although I try to stay abreast of current topics, I often find myself at a loss for ideas for my editorial column. If you feel that there is a pressing issue pertaining to campus life here at SIUE or the lives of students and faculty in general that are being ignored, write your question or comment to me at the Alestle. Your idea or question will be run, along with my article, and I will write an editorial pertaining to your issue.

E-mail your questions, comments and responses to dbelton@siue.edu, or write them down on a piece of paper and drop them off at the Alestle office on the second floor of the University Center.

Letters to the editor

Featuring letters from all around campus with some advice on how to save the inner cities and some more presidential criticism of "Rants and Raves."

Inner City Values

It is obvious that the living conditions and morale levels in many of America's inner cities are deplorable and detrimental not only to these cities' inhabitants, but in effect to our entire country. Surely economic structure is not the only reason behind these unfortunate conditions, but it is an important and often overlooked problem.

The under-credited citizens in these cities are not allowed to express and explore their individual talents and abilities as they instead get caught up in a state of government oppression. This oppression comes as a result of too many government imposed social programs that are intended to assist these Americans in attaining a means for survival in a harsh environment. These programs become barriers that actually encourage people to settle for less and impair their ability to find quality employment. What then should be done to save our inner cities?

The key is economic freedom, a free market system in which individuals can use their own personal incentive to succeed. Such a system would take inner city economies out of the trenches and into a better state-of-living, improving life there and across our great country.

On Wednesday, April 15 at 7:30 p.m., a man who knows first hand how successful this approach to living can be will greet the SIUE campus. Reginald Jones, Bronx native and successful entrepreneur, will explain detailed solutions to ending inner city strife in a lecture entitled, "Why Puff Daddy is a Capitalist." Attendees of this free event will be offered realistic solutions to serious problems and will be awakened to the harm too many government programs are causing in our country. Mr. Jones knows, as do all successful Americans, that the key to success is not a high-spending government, but rather a combination of freedom, hard work and personal perseverance.

Intimate Relations Revisited

I am writing in response to Matt Gross and Corey Stulce. As a personal friend and colleague of Matt's I can attest to his impeccable record as an upstanding citizen. I have worked with Matt, I formed a college organization with Matt and I am friends with Matt. He is always thoughtful and considerate. Matt sets a fine example as president of College Republicans. As a member of the College Republicans, I have every right to delve into Matt's life. If he is doing something wrong, I, as a person who voted him into office, have a right to know. If he is doing something wrong then I am going to call him on it, and take the appropriate action. I will be taking over the presidency of the College Republicans in the next couple of months and I fully expect to be held to the same standard that I impose on Matt.

Let me address Corey Stulce now. Your flippant attitude towards infidelity is disheartening. I am not interested in knowing every intimate detail of Clinton's sex life. However, I am interested in knowing if he is an adulterer. We should all hold our highest government official to equally high standards. I feel that the president of the United States should be a moral person.

For that matter, anyone in a position of leadership should be a moral person.

Jamie L. Currier
Speech Communications
Vice President
College Republicans

More Intimate Relations

First of all, Ms. Currier, I was not attempting to discredit Mr. Gross or accuse him of any wrongdoing. I was just trying to prove a point. Apparently, the SIUE College Republicans believe that once someone is appointed into office, their private lives become virtually non-existent. I don't think that is necessarily right. I will say again that I do not agree with infidelity, but I also do not believe it is anyone's business but the cheater and the person they are cheating on.

Who are you to judge anyone's morals, Ms. Currier? Just because you have been elected to a vice president's position on a small Illinois campus, you have the audacity to judge another man, our president of the United States. I didn't realize such power had been awarded to you.

I don't see what leading the country and having extra-marital affairs have to do with one another. I don't think the president is elected as an exact model of how all Americans should live their lives. I know I don't wake up each morning wondering what Bill Clinton is having for breakfast and attempt to eat the same. If this is something that you need, I suggest you re-evaluate your life.

I hope this matter is closed.

Inspector General sides with Alaska National Guard whistleblower

ANCHORAGE (AP) — Alaska Air National Guard Maj. Frederick "Dutch" Overly isn't shy about pointing out problems in the guard. In the past five years he has accused a half dozen officers of breaking laws and military regulations.

He has earned enemies in the guard's upper ranks and a reputation as a whistleblower who some say is wrong as often as he's right. But when his commanders began a bid to end his military career, Pentagon investigators sided with him.

Top commanders in the guard violated federal whistleblower protections by retaliating against Overly after he complained to the Pentagon, the governor's office and members of Congress, according to two Air Force Inspector General reports, one from last summer and the other finished in late March.

According to the report, commanders gave Overly a poor job evaluation in 1996, yanked his security clearance, moved him from wing executive officer to a logistics jobs and tried to drum him out of the service.

Commanders have since repaired some of the damage. No mention of the attempt to toss him out of the military will appear in his records, and he has gotten his security clearance back.

Overly's civilian attorney, Kurt Autor, wants to see him given back his old job as executive officer for the 176th Wing at Kulis Air National Guard Base in Anchorage. Overly also deserves back pay for a promotion to lieutenant colonel he was due to receive several years ago, Autor says.

Overly has spent more than $60,000 in attorneys and investigators fees defending himself, Autor said.

Jim Chase, a retired Air Force major who now heads the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs governmental affair office, does not dispute the Inspector General's findings.

But Chase said he does not know what else the guard can do for Overly. He's up for promotion to lieutenant colonel this summer, and that will proceed through regular channels.

"There's no harm. He's claiming, which is erroneous, that being in a different job would prohibit him from being promoted," Chase said.

"To say there are no remedies is false," Autor said. "It reflects an arrogance that is just unbelievable."

Autor sees the guard's behavior as part of a pattern of retaliation against soldiers and airmen who aren't part of an "old-boy network."

One way to be outside that network, Autor says, is to go on the record complaining about how the guard operates.

A board of inquiry that examined the guard in 1995, a few weeks after Gov. Tony Knowles took office, heard some unflattering testimony about race relations, training and cronyism.

Autor says many guard members who complained to that board have either retired or were forced out by retaliation.

"The IG's report is really the first time that there will be public exposure to the nature of the problem," Autor said.

So why did guard leaders go to such lengths to quiet a critic?

"It's because there's a corporate culture ... that's been perpetuated by the senior leadership of the Alaska National Guard that this kind of approach is successful," Autor said.

That's not how the guard sees it. True, they shouldn't have tried to throw Overly out of the military for making what later were ruled "protected" communications by the Inspector General.

But Maj. Gen. Jake Lestenkof, the head of the Alaska National Guard, said a review of Overly's case indicates commanders weren't out of line when they recommended ending his career.

"There was enough (questionable) conduct on the part of Maj. Overly to take this action," Lestenkof said.

Even his critics acknowledge that Overly, 45, is skilled in his duties as a logistics plans officer with the 176th Wing.

"He was always a very eager officer, very eager to serve," said

Capt. Mike Haller, an Alaska National Guard spokesman.

But when Overly complained about the way the guard spent money, handled promotions and favored some officers over others, senior officers had had enough.

A year ago he was told discharge proceedings were being prepared. The move was being made, his commanders told him, because his trustworthiness, loyalty and integrity were suspect.

The discharge board eventually recommended that the guard retain him but give him a letter of admonishment for publicly criticizing fellow officers in front of a high-level Pentagon visitor. Overly delivered what he called "a talking paper" to Defense Department Undersecretary Debra Lee in July of 1995, during an open forum with Lee.

More than that, guard officials say Overly and a small group of his colleagues, some now retired, have been trying to put one of their own in the guard's top spot.

Overly was one of the founding members of the Militia Association of Alaska, a group formed in late 1994 that asked Gov.-elect Knowles to order the resignations of all guard officers, who then would be reviewed for reappointment. It also wanted Knowles to establish protections against favoritism in promotions, among other requests.

Chase also says Overly's record as a whistleblower is spotty.

For instance, when he anonymously tipped off Lestenkof in 1996 that a top Alaska Air National Guard commander was having an affair with a woman in his command, that commander was forced to retire.

But Chase said a letter Overly sent anonymously several years earlier, outlining a litany of financial and other allegations against some officers, was a collection of lies. An investigation couldn't find a basis for any of the charges.

"Nothing wrong with wanting to run the show, but when you go out to smear everyone who's on the short list, and tell lies about them ... I don't know," Chase said.

Overly says the reprisals haven't stopped, and that he still is being given menial task. "The intimidation is overwhelming. You've got to be here to understand it," he said. "I'm still a pariah and no remedies have been offered to me."

Country's largest for-profit educator stirring controversy

NORRISTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Jordan Feltes is 3. He likes playing with plastic helicopters, singing "Wheels on the Bus" and listing his favorite animals in flawless Spanish.

In a neighboring room, Shannon Smith's kindergarten class is sorting colors and shapes on a computer spreadsheet and learning phonics.

Jordan and Shannon are two of the brightest students at the 110-pupil Chesterbrook Academy in suburban Philadelphia. Their progress is monitored by their parents, teachers and thousands of stockholders who have invested in Nobel Education Dynamics Inc., the largest for-profit school operator in the country.

Nobel, based in Media, Pa., runs 130 schools in 13 states, with capacity to educate about 20,000 pupils from preschool through eighth grade. Throughout the country, there are about 1,100 private, for-profit schools for that age group — or less than 1 percent of all schools. There are about 83,000 public schools and about 27,000 private nonprofit schools.

Nobel's advanced curriculum and long hours — schools are open from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. — make it popular with middle-income working parents. Tuition ranges from $4,500 to $6,000 a year; and classes always have fewer than 20 students.

"I never even thought about it (being for-profit) or even knew about it," said Karen Smith, whose daughter, Shannon, has attended Chesterbrook since she was 9 weeks old. "She's just getting an excellent education. She wouldn't be getting this at another preschool or at public school."

Despite Mrs. Smith's enthusiasm, educators say bringing capitalism to the classroom could ruin learning as we know it.

"With a not-for-profit, the decisions are going to be made based on what is best for the institution and what is best for the students ... (not based) on which way the financial winds are blowing," said Margaret Goldsborough, spokeswoman for the National Association of Independent Schools, which only represents nonprofit schools.

Goldsborough warned that while profits are high, students will have the best teachers, most up-to-date textbooks and highest quality lessons. If stocks drop, education could be compromised, she said.

"Nobody knows if they can provide a quality education," said Jack Jennings, director of the Center on National Education Policy in Washington. "Do they have to shift costs in some way? ... Maybe there's some things where you can't rely on market principles."

But advocates of for-profit schools say education should run like a business. If customers — i.e. parents — are dissatisfied or finances run amok, the business should fold, they say.

"Every aspect of education ... everything the schools need to operate is done on a free-market basis except for the actual teaching of children and management of schools," said John McLaughlin, director of the Education Industry Group, which tracks 25 publicly traded education companies, only a handful of which run schools.

"That's an accepted way of doing business in every other facet of our life and I don't see why it cannot play out in education."

Nobel education director Barbara Presseisen said having stockholders keeps school managers accountable.

"It makes you more efficient. It makes you more conscious of spending, makes you look through textbook catalogs carefully. Makes you be a wise buyer and a smart purchaser."

At Nobel, lesson plans and textbooks are chosen by a six-person national advisory board — five education experts and one member of Nobel's board of directors. The curriculum is discussed at the company's annual meeting, and stockholders are invited to open houses at Nobel schools about three times a year.

"Sometimes I'll hear from individual stockholders who may ask advice or suggest computer programs to use in the curriculum," Presseisen said.

Few for-profit schools consistently post a profit, said Lois Gerber, chairwoman of the 120-member National Independent Private Schools Association, which represents only for-profit schools. She estimated that on average, NIPSA schools make a 7 percent to 8 percent profit.

Nobel is the only publicly traded NIPSA member. It reported net losses in 1997 of $844,577 on revenues of $81 million. The company took $2.45 million in extraordinary and restructuring charges, citing the closures of facilities in Maine and Indiana.

Nobel stock dropped to $4.50 per share on the Nasdaq exchange last fall, down from more than $15 in early 1996. It has since rebounded to about $8.35 per share. An investment group that includes Michael R. Milken and Laurence J. Ellison, chief executive of Oracle Corp., bought a 21.2 percent stake in Nobel in January — leaving analysts optimistic about Nobel's future.

"That is a very strong indication of some faith in the companies from a couple of major investment groups," McLaughlin said. "They have done very well and are strongly on their way back."

Nobel's success or failure could be the beginning of a major change in the U.S. education.

"It's part of this overall feeling that public institutions are not operating well enough, so you bring in market principles to have it operate better," Jennings said.

"If they are successful, public schools should emulate the for-profit schools. If they are not successful, they should blow away."

Brawl involving football eight players, fraternity shakes Illinois State University

NORMAL, Ill. (AP) — It started with a college cliché: a drunken scuffle at a Saturday night fraternity party.

But this time, the hard feelings didn't fade as the next day's hangovers kicked in. Instead, police say, they festered and inspired a brutal mission of vengeance, complete with clubs, a bat and broken beer bottles.

Now eight Illinois State University football players are in court instead of on the practice field, together accused of battery, mob action and felony home invasion in an attack on the fraternity.

And with the possibility of more charges hanging in the air, the embarrassing and frightening episode is far from over.

"People live in fear, and people don't like living in fear," said Joe Benarroch, a 19-year-old sophomore and member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity.

Benarroch and about 40 other SAE members were in the fraternity's basement for a meeting on March 22 when attackers burst in.

"There were people holding bats, there was a guy holding a club, just storming in," he said. "It was just chaos. Chairs were being thrown around. People were fleeing for their lives."

Benarroch pointed to a narrow hallway between the bare, dingy basement and a bathroom. Two members dragged themselves down that hallway to escape the fight, leaving behind a trail of blood, he said.

His best friend, he said, lay at the bottom of the stairs.

"I thought he had been stabbed," Benarroch said. "He was just caked in blood."

In the end, six fraternity members were hospitalized for injuries ranging from a mangled hand to cuts and bruises. All were released.

By the time police arrived, many of the 20 or so attackers had fled. But the three people arrested had a common tie all were members of the university's football team.

Police trace the Sunday attack to a party at the fraternity house the night before. According to witnesses, a fight erupted after fraternity members caught a football player urinating in their shower and tried to get him to leave, said Normal Police Lt. Tony Daniels.

Because no police report was filed Saturday night, no one is sure who instigated the fight. Fraternity members insist they were not to blame.

But the Sunday attack appears to be retaliatory, Daniels said.

"Individuals identified as ISU football players ... basically began to wail on members of the fraternity," he said. "They had quite a lot of football players there."

The university's athletic department suspended the eight players who have been charged so far. They are: defensive linemen Jason Leach, 20, Leonard Reliford, 19, and Aaron M. Hallead, 19; defensive back Kenneth Ramsey, 22; linebacker Christopher Marks, 18; running back Mark A. Hosey Jr., 19; and walk-ons Robert Boyd, 19, and Aveion Cason, 18.

Two other players were arrested but never charged.

The players have not responded publicly to the charges and could not be reached by telephone, either because their numbers are not listed or they did not answer.

But football coach Todd Berry said at a news conference soon after the attack that he thought the reported number of players involved was exaggerated. He also said some players were "beaten up" in Saturday's fight at the fraternity party.

"It's right for everybody involved to suffer the natural consequences of doing something wrong in both incidents," Berry said.

Athletic director Rick Greenspan said he and Berry have met with the team to sort out what happened. They are relying on the court system and university disciplinary process to help decide their next course of action, he said.

"Our approach has been one of disappointment, dismay, remorse," Greenspan said.

He called the incident an embarrassment but noted that it involves only a few players on Illinois State's 90-man roster.

The university has begun its own student judicial review of the attack, said ISU spokesman Jay Groves. The off-campus incident should not stir up concerns about campus safety, he added.

Prosecutors, meanwhile, are sifting through more than 50 statements police took from witnesses. Police continue to look at five more suspects to gauge their involvement, Daniels said.

Still, because only one or two fraternity members could identify any alleged attackers, prosecutors could have a tough time bringing more charges, said Stephanie Wong, an assistant McLean County state's attorney.

At the fraternity house, little evidence remains of the attack. A gaping hole in the basement marks the place where the fraternity's letters used to be, and a few window panes are broken.

But fraternity members still remember the attack vividly.

SAE chapter president Rich Salvador said the incident has drawn the fraternity closer together. But some members are afraid to return to the house and have indicated they will move out next year, he said.

The rest hope for swift justice as they try to put the incident behind them, Benarroch said.

"You don't necessarily heal," he said. "You don't forget. You just move on."

Contractors claim feds owe them $20 million for climatic lab work

EGLIN AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP) — Sixteen construction companies claim the federal government owes them $20 million more for extra work performed during the renovation of the Air Force's McKinley Climatic Laboratory.

The government already has paid about $75 million for the project that was completed last June. The dispute has left several subcontractors on shaky financial ground, the Northwest Florida Daily News of Fort Walton Beach reported Saturday.

"We started the project with a $1 million contingency fund," said Mike Singleton, president of Colorado-based Singleton Sheet Metal Works. "When we pulled out of there, we were broke."

The laboratory is an insulated and refrigerated hangar, big enough to enclose a football field, built 51 years ago on this

Florida Panhandle base. It is used to test military and civilian aircraft, vehicles and other equipment under various weather conditions including temperatures ranging from 165 degrees to minus-165 degrees.

The renovation was supposed to take two years but the lab was found to be in worse condition than expected after the work began. Changes then were made in the renovation plan that added more than a year and additional work to the project, but the budget remained unchanged, the contractors contend.

Tim Dugan, a spokesman in the Army Corps of Engineers' Mobile, Ala., district office, said he could not comment on the claims because they are in litigation before the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals. The Corps of Engineers handled the project.

Department of Health cites nursing home for negligence

EDWARDSVILLE, Ill. (AP) — The Illinois Department of Public Health has cited the Madison County Nursing Home for negligence after an 85-year-old man with a history of escape attempts fell to his death out a third-floor window of the home in February.

The nursing home was cited in five violations of state rules in the death of William Morton of Collinsville, who fell from the window of his room, apparently while trying to escape.

The Department of Public Health report noted that Morton had tried to leave the home several times since arriving Jan. 8 and had to be restrained by a soft belt four days before his death after attempting to leave by a fire door on the third floor and threatening to climb out a window.

The state charged that the home failed to advise Morton's doctor that Morton had been restrained, was negligent in their supervision of him and failed to develop a plan to stop Morton from trying to leave.

But Roger Hotson, administrator of the nursing home, said that consistently restraining Morton, locking his window or administering drugs would have violated federal and state guidelines. He said the staff had checked

Morton shortly before his death and found him sleeping.

The state's allegations came just days before the Madison County Board will be debating the future of county nursing and sheltered-care homes. Last month, voters rejected tax increases to build and operate a $6.5 million combined home.

Well, finally, something has been released to help people like me out. Olean-based snacks have hit the shelves. Now, tubby bastards like myself can enjoy the great taste of snack chips and not worry about eating the entire bag.

The snacks, which have the same great taste of the old fatty kind, are missing half the calories and most of the fat.

Of course, everything that's too good to be true, probably is. Many people have heard about the possible side-effects of Olean, and the chips even come with an information (warning) label.

The chips may cause "loose stool" and/or stomach cramping. Loose stool, what a nice way of referring to diarrhea. I don't see what the problem is. Not only will the chips not add on the pounds, they'll make you lose weight by sending you to the bathroom for multiple and lengthy visits.

Or else, the painful stomach cramps will make you stop eating. And, for the really obese Olean dieter, the eventual cancer that the chemicals probably will give you will definitely help drop off the pounds.

Soon you'll be saying, "MMmmm, that's malignant!"

I'm so glad that those wacky scientists at the Food and Drug Administration have decided to let the general public consume some more chemicals. I certainly can't wait for Olean chocolate and peanut butter.

The real fun will come when they release "I Can't Believe It's Not Deadly!" the fun chemical that actually releases tapeworms into the body to devour up those calories. You can lose weight by eating all you want, baby!

Ben Stein offers timely tips for TAX day

■ BY COREY STULCE
LIFESTYLE EDITOR

Wednesday will find much of the country in a panic to get their important tax documents into the mail. After the excitement, frazzled Americans can relax and watch mega-brained Ben Stein make mincemeat of an auditor, a CPA and a lawyer on his trivia game show, "Win Ben Stein's Money."

The second season premiere episode will air on April 15 on Comedy Central. The show stars actor ("Ferris Bueller's Day Off") and former Nixon speechwriter, Stein as he takes on three contestants who try to win $5,000 of his money. In an effort to help those who are struggling with their tax receipts, Stein offers 12 tax tips for the public:

Tip #1: Unless you have an extremely complicated return, you don't necessarily need an expensive CPA to do your tax returns. Try a computer tax preparation program like "Turbo Tax." To relax, try "Duke Nukem" and "Cyber Sluts."

Tip #2: Remember to keep all your business records in case you ever get audited. Keep all your Yanni records in case you ever get a lobotomy.

Tip #3: Report anything that can conceivably be considered a deduction. For example, if you're an exotic dancer, breast implants are considered a business expense. However, if you're having a business meeting at a topless bar, you can't write off your underpants.

Tip #4: Remember to deduct last year's tax preparation help. Forget about deducting the cost of professional help you received from your personal psychic friend, Vladamir.

Tip #5: Don't take a home office deduction unless absolutely necessary. It's like waving a red flag at the IRS. Incidentally, writing off your car is like stuffing a blue handkerchief in your left pocket. Not that there's anything wrong with that.

Tip #6: Whenever possible, take payment in barter so you don't have income tax consequences, i.e. "I'll prepare your will if you paint my house." When dealing with me, however, please keep in mind that I have a very big house.

Tip #7: Jointly own all property with your spouse so that it escapes any tax consequence at death. I know death is a less than cheerful subject, but the bright side is that as far as we know, there are no taxes in the afterlife.

Tip #8: If you have the misfortune to be audited, remember that the IRS agent is just a man or woman like you or me and not a satanic figure. He/she just wants to get home at the end of the day like you, except you don't live in hell.

Tip #9: The absolute best tax deal is to have as much of your income as possible as capital gains that are unrealized and then pass the property on to your heirs tax free, except for the estate tax. If you understand this piece of advice you should be working for the IRS.

Tip #10: Never let anyone sell you anything on the sole basis that it's tax deductible, you can't make money on a tax deduction. Also, never let anyone sell you anything that guarantees it will stop the itching and burning. It will only make you walk funny.

Tip #11: As terrible as you feel when you're doing your taxes, that's how good you feel when you put them in the mail. Unless you owe money, in which case, who am I kidding? It sucks.

Tip #12: If you are one of the lucky ones to get a tax return, take most of the money and pay off credit card debts. Paying off credit card debts will save you hundreds of dollars this year in interest payments, and free up additional cash each month. If that doesn't sound good, party like it's 1999. You'll be able to write it off on your return in the year 2000.

After a clever ruse on April Fool's Day, the real truth about who is Cartman's father will be revealed on April 22.

Comedy Central will move up the date of the new episode of "South Park" due to popular demand. It was originally planned to air with the new season's episodes that begins on May 20.

The show used a clever holiday tie-in earlier this month, by claiming that the rotund character's dad would be unmasked on April 1. But, instead, the episode shown was a 30-minute mini-movie about two other "South Park" characters, Terrence and Phillip.

The real episode's plot involves Mephesto being shot and Chef and the quartet of schoolboys travelling to hell to find out the truth.

Winning streak over weekend puts Cougar softball No. 1 in GLVC

■ BY BRETT LICATA
SPORTS REPORTER

Winning 14 of their last 15 games made the SIUE softball team the overwhelming choice for the No. 1 seed in the Great Lakes Valley Conference tournament next weekend.

SIUE made their claim as the best team in the conference by going 5-1 last weekend. Two of the wins were over the team that finished last season ranked No. 2 in the country, the University of Wisconsin-Parkside.

Sophomore pitcher Sara Obrecht improved her record to 4-1 in a 5-3 SIUE win over St. Joseph's College. Freshman Mandy Uhrhan went 2 for 4 with a home run and two RBIs. Kim Messinger, of Bridgeton, Mo., added two hits and an RBI, while catcher Kari Franzen had two hits and a couple of stolen bases.

Mental mistakes proved to be the deciding factor against an offensive minded Lewis University team on Friday.

With a tie game going into the fifth inning, SIUE self-destructed with sloppy fielding in the last three innings to allow Lewis to pull away for a 9-1 victory.

After being named GLVC

Player of the Week last week, junior pitcher Jessica Silbe continued her dominance on the mound. She picked up the victory as the Cougars edged Wisconsin-Parkside 3-2 in the last game on Friday.

SIUE broke a 1-1 tie in the bottom of the third with two runs. Wisconsin-Parkside added a run in the sixth, but Silbe closed the door on a comeback to take her record to 10-6.

Gwen Jackson, of Collinsville, went 2 for 3 with two stolen bases and an RBI. Sarah Sollberger, of Peoria, also had two pounding St. Joseph's 16-4.

Six a run until the sixth inning. The Cougars ended the weekend with a decisive win over Wisconsin-Parkside. Uhrhan had two hits and two RBIs in leading the Cougars to a 6-1 win over the national powerhouse. SIUE went down 1-0 in the third, but came back to score three runs in the fourth and added three more in the sixth to cruise to the victory. Silbe recorded her team-high 12th victory of the season and the Cougars ran their record to 30-16 overall and 22-5 in the conference. With the No. 8 seed, The University of Indianapolis will be SIUE's first test in the GLVC tournament, which begins Friday in Kenosha, Wis. Head coach Sandy Montgomery likes her team's chances to win the tournament. "If we keep playing the way we have been for the past month, I think we have an excellent chance to come out of this tournament with the championship," Montgomery said.

Niki Mitts went 3 for 4 with a home run and two RBIs. Jackson had three hits and swiped a base.

Cougars split doubleheader over weekend with St. Joe's

■ BY TONY AMMANN
SPORTS REPORTER

The Cougar baseball team showed signs of improvement defensively Saturday against conference foe St. Joseph's College.

Head coach Gary Collins said the defense was not quite where he would like it to be. The players answered his statement by playing errorless baseball and splitting a pair of games in the doubleheader.

In the first game, senior pitcher Bob LaMarsh put on a show with his bat and his throwing arm. At the plate, he went 4 for 4 with two homers and four RBIs. He also hurled a complete game, striking out seven while walking just one. The Cougars won the game 11-3.

"He's a real player," Collins said. "He had a big game. When he pitches well, he plays well."

The Cougars put St. Joseph's in a hole early. They came out firing their huge bats right off the start, scoring five runs in the first inning and three in the second.

"This is a big inning team," Collins said. "We either get 'em early, in the middle, or in the end."

SIUE shortstop Mike Robertson contributed with three hits, and Jason Sievert blasted his fourth home run of the season en route to victory.

In the second game, run production was more difficult for the Cougars. St. Joseph's hurler Jake Zajc shut out the baffled Cougars for eight innings, beating the Cougars 6-4.

"He pitched well, just like he does against everyone else," Collins said. "We just ran into a really good pitcher."

Despite trailing 6-0 going into the ninth inning, SIUE was relentless in losing without a fight. They knocked out Zajc, but Mike Field came on to stop the bleeding for St. Joseph's.

"There was a bad call at first (base) that just about everyone disagreed with but the umpire," Collins said. "It cost us an out and a run. Sometimes you get the call, sometimes you don't."

SIUE right fielder Jason Abernathy had three hits, and Robertson hit his team-leading tenth home run in the losing effort.

The Cougars take on McKendree College today at McKendree.

Over the weekend, the Cougars got a rude awakening that set their overall record back to 11-3 losing to Drury College and Southwest Baptist University.

SIUE battled the Drury Panthers last Wednesday and lost 3-6.

Jason Stephens and Zaid Al-Numany (serving) serve to the Southwest Bearcats who they beat 9-8 in their match.

The two matches were won by Tim McKay and doubles Jason Stephens and Zaid Numany.

Next, the Cougars took on the Knights of Bellarmine College. SIUE sent them back to their castle by winning 8-1.

Finally, the Northern Kentucky University Norsees came, saw and left with a 6-3 loss.

SIUE has a 9-0 conference record.

The Cougars next move is the Great Lakes Valley Conference Tournament this weekend.

Track and field keep first place finishes at home

■ BY SARAH FINLEY
SPORTS EDITOR

Not only did the weather permit a beautiful day to compete, the Cougars proved worthy opponents by keeping 12 first place finishes at home.

The Cougar Classic was held this past Saturday at SIUE where the Cougars cleaned up by having someone finish in 29 of the 36 events.

Along with the outstanding finishes, a few names kept popping up as repeat finishers for the Cougars.

Among them were Mekelle

Beck who finished first in one event and second in two events; Lisa Ribes competed in only two events but took first place in both; Joshua Ritzel competed in three events and took home second place in all three and Kelly Huckleberry finished third in all three events in which he competed.

In women's discus, Mekelle Beck finished second, Kelly Saunders third, Bethany Louderman fifth, and Heather Collins fouled.

In women's shot put, Beck finished second, Saunders fourth, and Collins fifth.

In women's high jump,

Louderman finished first and April Clendenin second.

In women's long jump the lone finisher was Monica Edwards taking first place.

In women's javelin, Beck finished first, Clendenin second, Saunders fourth, Louderman fifth and Collins eighth.

In the women's 4x100 relay SIUE took first place.

In the women's 4x400 SIUE took first place and SIUE B took sixth.

In women's 100-meter dash Radiance Pitts took third and Monica Edwards finished sixth.

Sports Column: Finley analyzes the home run king of the Cardinals

■ BY SARAH FINLEY

Mark McGwire.

A man that can knock the hide off the ball with the ease that the rest of the world uses to open a door.

The same man who seemed to let the entire Cardinal family down this past Sunday when he struck out.

I was sitting at the dinner table eating Easter dinner with my family and friends and my friend made a comment that almost seemed impossible.

"I betcha McGwire strikes out. Do you think that your family would hate me if I said that out loud?"

Needless to say, I warned him against making that slanderous statement about my team.

Die-hard Cardinal fan I am not, but a true lover of a good game, I am.

Not a moment after he said that,

Orel Hershisier sent a whizzing fastball right down McGwire's middle section sending him back to the dugout with a smirk of disgust on his face.

Not only did my jaw drop, but every last one of those Big Mac-loving fans lost the elasticity in their jaws.

My heart sank. Sad, but true, I felt bad for Ole Mark. He seemed to want to smack that ball into another time zone so bad that the disgust in his face seemed almost heartbreaking.

My goodness, the home run king had just struck out.

How Casey At The Bat can you get?

The next thing I heard in my ear was another slanderous comment from the peanut gallery.

"Told you so. McGwire isn't all he's cracked up to be," my friend said.

Alright, so he may not be Superman, even though his pants are tight enough to qualify as tights. But what about all those other mighty players that did little things like that, but in the end came out shining like a new penny.

Babe Ruth. Need I say more?

Sure the Great Bambino smacked 715 home runs, but he also struck out somewhere in the ballpark of 1,000 times — give or take a few hundred.

Even though it was just one time, in one game, that final whiff of the bat through the air made it evident, even though we all love Mark McGwire, the man is not immortal.

He will make mistakes, be it at bat or at first base, but that is baseball.

Just watch next time. His bat will be so hungry for hide, I just pity the outfielders.

They know what he is capable of and so do the thousands of Cardinal fans.
