SIUE hosts debates for Congressional seats

By Melanie Adams
Assistant News Editor

Students, faculty and members of the community looked on as Democrats Sam Cahnman and Jay Hoffman, candidates running for the 20th District congressional seat, answered questions and debated on their political views on March 1.

The debate was part of a series of debates sponsored by the University Center Board (UCB) which gives the individuals running for either the Republican or Democratic Primary Election in the 20th District the chance to explain their platforms and how they differ on issues.

The debate was moderated by Pat Gauen of the Illinois Post Bureau. Questions were taken from the audience before the debate to save time during the debate itself.

During the opening statements, Hoffman thanked members of the UCB for hosting the debate and went on to tell the audience about his own experiences in Congress.

He also said that he was proud of the time he spent in St. Clair County's District Attorney's office, and said that during his term in office he tried to be an independent voice for his constituents.

Cahnman, during his opening statement, belittled his opponent on a number of his views including the environmental issue, the use of PAC money during campaigns and the abortion issue.

"My opponent says that he is an advocate for the

"Square TV" produces its first show

By David Weil
News Reporter

SIUE students interested in television broadcasting now have a new way to get involved. Square TV, a new student-produced variety show, premiered on the campus' closed circuit cable system on Feb. 28.

The show is the brainchild of SIUE senior Jeff Boulicault. Boulicault first conceived the idea over a year ago. He began by contacting department heads in a search for interested students to participate. The show is serving as his senior project.

While all students are working as volunteers, the program provides valuable work experience.

"I liked it," said Senior Sheri McCord. "It's hands on and you've got to do everything."

The first show featured McCord and Laura Betner introducing the show and providing local news. Lula Gladden then reviewed CD's by Tori Amos, L. L. Cool J., and Bjork. Movie reviews for Grumpier Old Men and Mr. Holland's Opus were provided by Brad Richter.

There was also an original comedy piece presented by Jason

Bayer and Keith Neausbaum. The segment, a spoof of the movie Hoop Dreams, was titled "Basketball Dreamer." The story followed the progress of Randall Freeburg, a wanna-be basketball star long on talk but short on talent.

Current programs last about 20 minutes, but Boulicault hopes to expand in the future.

"We're starting out with 20 minutes, but we're trying to develop a 30-minute show," Boulicault said.

Plans for an interview with the nationally known rock band Del Amitri and segments about the St. Louis St. Patrick's Day Parade are currently under development for future programs.

Boulicault is also working to get movie passes and free CD's to help students with reviews. He is also looking for underwriters to help with the purchase and upkeep of equipment.

Boulicault hopes to further develop the show by expanding into the Edwardsville and Maryville cable systems.

"We're laying the groundwork. We hope to expand it to the Edwardsville and Maryville cable system on public access."

Students interested in helping on future shows are welcome. For more information or to volunteer to help contact Jeff Boulicault at 692-2242.

University should look for parking increase alternatives

As always, I write this on my own and not on behalf of anyone else.

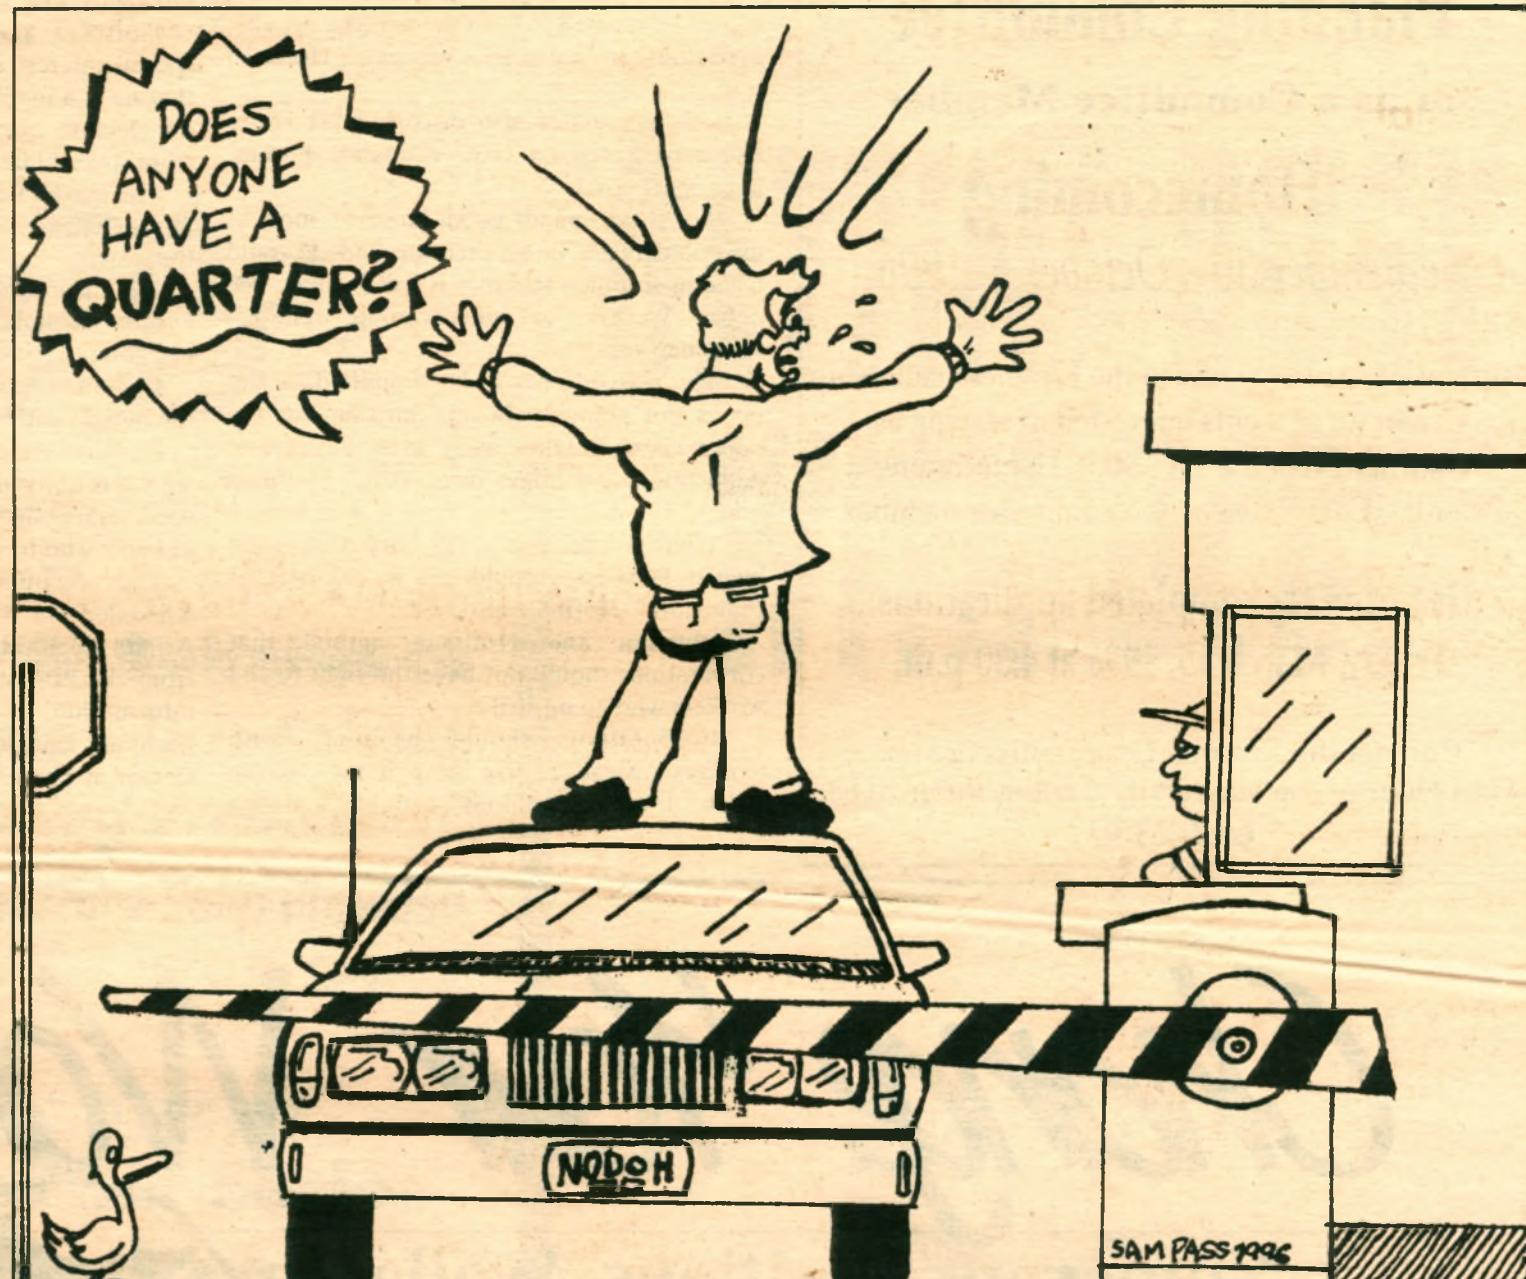

I feel that the Parking and Traffic Committee should look at alternatives to the proposed $35 increase in parking sticker fees. The reason is that many students and faculty and staff members feel that it is too high a price to pay for parking. Here are thoughts:

1. Finance the repairs to the parking lots by installing gates at the roads to the parking lots and charge $0.25 when people LEAVE the University. This per-use fee is much fairer and gives the advantage of being able to charge higher in the future as needs arise.

2. Use the money from the increase to build parking garages—one on the south side of the Rendleman Building and one on the north side of the Lovejoy Library. Drivers can use their ID cards to enter and exit the garages. In addition, build enclosed walkways to the building so we can go to school and work out of inclement weather. The construction of parking lots will make space available for future building construction (new residence halls?).

3. At the very least, any increase in sticker fees should be paid with the following options for the campus community: a) payable all at once, or b) payable over 3-6 months. This would be less of a financial strain on all concerned.

The Alestle reported that the Staff Senate supported the increase. Well, the Staff Senate doesn't represent me in this case. Until I started work here at SIUE, I never had to pay to park on employer's parking lot. The parking lot repairs were paid from monies collected from customers (known as gross profits).

Also, when we (the customers of the parking lots) are dissatisfied with prices and service, we do not have the choice of going to a competitor's lot. We are stuck with what we got!

So, how about the University taking some time now to find out what we the consumers want and then the price increases will be more palatable. Next meeting of the Parking and Traffic Committee is March 15 at 10 a.m. All of the campus community should try and attend.

Institute for higher learning or just for money making

Is this an institute for higher learning, or is it a money making institute? In my two years at SIUE, I have encountered a number of disturbing events.

The first event occurred after my girlfriend returned a book that I had checked out. It seems the library did not check the book in properly and then misplaced it. I calmly filed the search requests and after talking with half of the Chemistry department, found out that this was a common occurrence.

I don't mean that misplacing books is common, but the lack of checking them in properly seems to be a problem. Even when I filed my search requests, the student workers told me that I should not use the book depositories, but that I should turn books in at the desk and get a receipt? Mistake number one!

Another event which seems to be a common occurrence at SIUE is the dreaded parking tickets. Last year I received a ticket for parking in the correct lot. Do these guys actually look for the stickers on the vehicles?

This year, I received another ticket. This one was for parking at the VC while working out. I pay for a lot A sticker, why would I park in the VC lot unless I was using the facilities for which we pay for? Where are these policies located, because they conveniently forgot to tell me about them when I purchased my parking sticker.

The last one is small but significant. I have a two-year-old ID which recently cracked. When I went to obtain a replacement, I was told that I would have to pay a replacement fee of $10.

These fees are incorporated into our tuition fees yearly. How come, after two years, a person is required to pay to replace something in which they have already paid for twice?

After considering these small incidents, I ask again: Is this an institute of higher learning, or a money making institute?

In my opinion, as a student and a graduate assistant, all the administration offices need to reevaluate policies in these areas.

has taken a tax pledge to not raise taxes.

"I'm glad that Sam has kept up with the agreement to run a clean campaign," Hoffman joked.

Hoffman then gave his opinion on term limitations in congress.

He said that although the Republican Party may still hold power in Congress, there are issues that both the leading political parties agree on.

"Term limits, for example. The Republican and Democrats do agree that term limits should be created to limit the number of years a person can serve in Congress," Hoffman said.

Both candidates also discussed tax issues and commented on GOP candidate Forbes' flat tax proposal.

"A flat tax sounds good; however, most of us would result in an increase and it would bring in so much less that it will increase the deficit. We must cut out corporate welfare," Cahnman said.

"The tax code has to be simplified. A flat tax is not going to benefit anyone but the upper class. It takes away from healthcare, deductions, and home ownership," Hoffman said.

"What we need is a tax code that small owned businesses could get a 100 percent reduction," Hoffman also said.

Cahnman and Hoffman agreed that corporations should not have the right to fire workers who go on strike.

"Corporations should negotiate with workers instead of fire them if they go on strike. I support unions, and have always supported unions," Cahnman said.

Another topic that Cahnman and Hoffman agreed upon was the misuse of PACs and special interest group funds in campaigns.

"I have found that there is too much influence from lobbyist and special interest groups. If I am elected, I will push to pass a bill that will eliminate PAC funds during elections and prohibit the mailing privileges to be used for campaigning for members seeking reelection," Cahnman said.

He also said that corporate workers are too greedy and they are passing their greed off on to members of Congress through PACs and said that his opponent generously took PAC money for his campaign.

Hoffman agreed that too much of the special interest monies were being used and that he is a leading advocate on putting a cap on election money a candidate can receive from special interest groups.

The candidates also commented on ways to improve the economy and provide jobs within the state.

To ensure jobs, Hoffman said, we need to ensure technology, and we do that through investing in education.

Cahnman replied that we need to balance the budget and invest in job training.

Hoffman ended the debate by saying that he feels it is unfortunate that politicians resort to name calling and that people are wise enough to know who to vote for.

The Republican Primary debate is scheduled for March 15 by UCB's Current Affairs Committee in the Meridian Ballroom from 12:30 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. For more information, please contact the Office of Campus Life in the Kimmel Leadership Center at 692-2330 or the UCB office at 692-3372.

Women applicants won't have to be interviewed by Citadel graduates for admission

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) Women who apply to The Citadel's all-male cadet corps will not need to be interviewed by Citadel graduates as part of the admissions process, a federal judge said Friday.

"The problem is, there are no female alumni," U.S. District Judge C. Weston Houck said during a hearing on how the college is to handle women's applications.

"Many of the male alumni are very much opposed to The Citadel becoming coeducational," and it would not be fair to require women to meet with those who oppose their attending, Houck said.

Male applicants must be interviewed by an alumnus to help them learn more about the corps.

Houck said he would not substitute another form orientation for women until the U.S. Supreme Court rules on the constitutionality of all-male state military colleges.

The court is expected to rule this spring in a challenge to the all-male policy at Virginia Military Institute.

The Citadel is processing applications from three women who have applied to enroll this fall. One is from Nancy Mellette who took Shannon Faulkner's place in the legal challenge to The Citadel's all-male corps. Ms. Mellette, from Irmo, attends a North Carolina military academy.

Houck also filed 21 pages of documents he said were faxed to his office last summer from the state Higher Education Commission.

The material included 18 pages of budget information and three pages about course offerings at The Citadel.

Citadel attorneys want Houck to remove himself from the case. They say he violated the appearance of impartiality when he received the information and discussed the case privately with state Higher Education Commissioner Fred Sheheen, a strong advocate of women in the corps.

"The only thing I recall I was seeking was budget information and the only thing I received was budget information," the judge said Friday.

He said earlier he wanted the information to prepare for the trial on whether a state women's leadership program at Converse College was comparable to The Citadel. The leadership institute is designed as an alternative to keep women out of The Citadel.

The trial has been delayed until after the Supreme Court rules.

Houck didn't decide whether he will remove himself. Attorneys have until March 25 to file papers dealing with the school's motion.

UNC professors reach settlement

GREELEY, Colo. (AP)—The University of Northern Colorado has reached a $715,000 agreement with 56 faculty members who sued over the way their pay was calculated.

The agreement reached Friday means a trial scheduled April 1 in Weld County District Court will be canceled.

The professors had claimed in a June 1994 lawsuit that their salaries were not properly calculated according to university policies. In part, they argued that faculty salaries weren't keeping pace with those of administrators.

The agreement settling the lawsuit calls for distributing $715,000 to the tenured faculty members using a formula to be approved by the board of trustees.

The 56 faculty members represent roughly 10 percent of UNC's faculty.

The agreement stipulates the lawsuit will not affect the employees' participation in any early retirement programs. The two sides also agreed there would be no retaliation as a result of the lawsuit.

Each side in the case will pay its own attorneys' fees and costs.

"The board of trustees is confident that this settlement is in the best interests of the UNC community," said Kay Norton, board vice chairwoman. "It will avoid further disruption from litigation and further the board's agenda in moving the institution forward."

The attorneys for the faculty members said the settlement was in their clients' best interest.

Celebrate Sober

On Friday, Edwardsville Junior High seventh grade students will learn to "Celebrate Sober" at the 7th annual "Celebrate Sober" day long drug prevention program.

"Celebrate Sober" is a program that focuses on prevention. It is designed to promote healthy decision making in life.

"Celebrate Sober" day is founded on the belief that every person can make sound decisions regarding life's choices and behavior if they have factual information and understanding of oneself and attitudes. By experiencing "Celebrate Sober," a positive influence can be achieved.

SIUE Single Parents: Supplying a double dose of love and care

By Danette Watt
Lifestyle Reporter

It isn't easy being parents. It's even tougher when there's only one in the home.

The estimated 8,961 single parents today have politicians, religious leaders and experts from many fields talking. They're talking about the rise in number of single-parent homes and why that is, about the effects single-parent homes have on children and how important (or unimportant) having a father in the home is to the psychological growth of the children.

Two single parents agreed to talk about their experiences for the Alestle. Marbel Jackson is the father of two daughters, ages 11 and 13. He's been separated from his wife for several years.

Reba Lackett is the mother of four: three boys, ages 15, 11 and 4, and a 13-year-old daughter. Divorced once, she's been separated from her current spouse since 1993.

Discipline can be a tricky topic when you're on your own. It isn't always easy to be objective. Parents, single or otherwise, constantly ask themselves, "Am I being too hard? Too lenient?"

Jackson and Lackett both work at balancing firm discipline and a loving relationship with their children.

Jackson is in graduate school working towards a sociology degree. He figures his experiences as a single parent will help him in future jobs as a social worker.

He said he's by nature "pretty laid back, but I'm afraid of being too laid back with my kids. I try for consistent discipline. Sometimes they (his daughters) say I'm too strict. I try to acknowledge when I've made a mistake. I learn as I go along each day."

Lackett, a junior going for a political science degree, believes in children taking responsibility for their actions. She tells her kids if they hang around with people likely to get into trouble and find themselves in trouble along with them, to not expect her to bail them out.

"I say trouble is easy to get into, but hard to get out of. If my 15-year-old got into trouble with the police and went to jail, I'd let him spend the night there. It would teach him a lesson better than anything," Lackett said.

Lackett works hard at maintaining a good relationship with her kids. Her own mother's parenting style was very authoritative, she said, and she wants to do things differently.

"I want to be a friend to my kids when they need one, but a parent when they need a parent. I spend a lot of time with my kids," she said.

Lackett said she uses television as a tool, making every effort to watch it with her kids so they can discuss what they've seen and heard. She said they "watch everything from Walt Disney to Menace II Society."

"Instead of telling them 'you can't see this, you can't watch that,' I want to know how they feel about what they see. If they have a question, I answer it. And it doesn't matter what I tell my son, I tell my daughter the same thing. I try to make it so they feel comfortable to ask me what they want to know."

She believes the more children know about life, the better off they'll be. "If they're old enough to ask the question, they're old enough to get an answer. They need to know they can do something differently with their lives than what they see on television or in a movie."

Jackson also spends a lot of time with his children. He said he thinks they have an excellent relationship and has "always been involved in their lives. I always knew when I had kids that I would want to be with them. The longest I've gone without seeing them was six weeks."

He said he can relate to some of the problems single mothers have when it comes to dealing with social agencies because agencies don't treat single dads much differently.

"I applied for aid and seemed to have to constantly

please see SINGLE PARENTS, page 11

Single Parents

prove that I was eligible. There's no privacy—you have to expose everything to them and it still may not be enough to get support. It makes me more aware of what women go through and how the system is set up," Jackson said.

But he said he sometimes resents it when women talk about the "deadbeat dads" in their lives. He doesn't get any support from his daughters' mother and doesn't expect any.

"They say men do this but I want to say that women do too. That side of it doesn't come out. I don't expect it (financial support) so I don't think about it. It's not a factor in how I'm trying to raise my kids," he said.

Lackett is a part-time teller with Mercantile Bank in Alton and once she can get her degree, she hopes to continue onto law school. She receives partial public aid and would love to have a one-on-one talk with some of the politicians in office.

"Everyone is whining and whimpering about people on public aid. They say people on aid are lazy. My ex and my current spouse don't give a dime, but it would make it a lot easier if they would," she said.

Both Jackson and Lackett said there were times when they wished for someone of the opposite sex in the home to deal with some issues that cropped up.

"'Girl stuff.' That's when I wish I had a female around, just to be able to talk to my daughter about sex and boys,"

Jackson said. "She's embarrassed when I bring it up. A woman could relate better."

Lackett's problem is of a different nature and one that's debated by "the experts." Does a boy growing up in a home without a father suffer from lack of a role model?

"There comes an age—about 9 or 10—when a boy needs a guy," Lackett said. "I was in the Navy when my oldest son went through that stage so I got a coworker to help. When my 11-year-old went through the same thing, it was harder."

She said his father didn't show an interest and her own brothers lack direction in their lives. Still, she was able to find some men who took over as role models.

"I think guys who got the nurturing they needed from their own dads at that age will be better dads themselves," she said.

By virtue of their situation, single parents have the responsibility of many roles to fill: breadwinner, homemaker, disciplinarian, teacher, etc. All that work leaves little time for themselves. A strong support system is what gets many of them through rough times, whether it comes from family or friends.

Lackett admits she "sometimes wants to say the hell with it. I push, push, push myself and I get tired. But I tell myself the end result will be worth it."

She gets most of her support from friends she met while attending Lewis and Clark Community College in Alton. When her mother died last semester, she "felt the walls were closing in," and sought counseling through the university's counseling office.

Jackson said he gets some support from friends as well, but "when I'm feeling real down, I just deal with it. Fortunately, I haven't had too many bad times."

Any free time I have is late night, when I have time to do some meditating. Every now and then I'll go out, but that's rare."

Joyce Schrader, coordinator for the United Christian Foundation at the Religious Center, runs a support group for single parents that meets twice a month. She couldn't say how many single parents there are on campus, but knows she isn't reaching them all.

"Recently, an RA from Tower Lake asked me to speak to a group of single parents from her unit. Of the 16 families in the three buildings, 15 of them were headed by single parents."

Schrader describes her single parents group as one that has fun but is a place to get all kinds of support.

"It provides a wealth of resources to be shared and connections to be made. We hope to bring together SIUE single parents and let them know they're not alone."

The group usually meets the first and third Thursday of each month, but for March only, they will meet on the second and fourth Thursday. The next meeting will be March 14 at noon in the community room of the center. A parking voucher is provided so parents may park in the pay lot at no charge. Call 3246 for more information.

Are we to teach our children to say 'no' when we said 'yes'?

If you're the parent of a teenager, there's a good chance your son or daughter has already experimented with drugs and alcohol. Have you thought about how you'll handle the discovery? Or if it already has happened, how did you handle it? Maybe you've been talking to your child all along about the consequences of substance abuse and your feelings about drugs.

A few years ago I came across a book called "Getting Your Kids to Say No in the '90s When You Said Yes in the '60s," by Victor Strasburger.

As a parent who was once into the drug scene, I knew I'd have to decide how, when or if I would approach the topic with my children and if I would even admit to being a part of it.

If I admitted to smoking marijuana, would I be tacitly condoning it? Could my kids really understand why I got high in the first place when I've worked so hard to give them a childhood so different than my own in the hopes that they wouldn't think they needed to get high?

These are not easy questions to answer but one that many parents need to consider, especially when there are so many "baby boomer" parents. I have since decided that honesty is the best policy in this case and when the time is right, I'll "own up."

Of course I'm not suggesting everyone did drugs when they were younger—my own husband makes it emphatically clear that he never did. I, on the other hand, did and do not apologize for it. I could not be the person I am today without having had those experiences, regardless of what they were.

About three weeks ago, USA Weekend ran an article on "The New Pot Culture." According to the University of Michigan's annual Monitoring the Future study, the percentage of seniors who said they smoked marijuana the previous year rose from 21.9 percent in 1992 to 34.7 percent in 1995.

Experts are alarmed because they say the current use of marijuana is different in four significant ways.

The age level is down. First-time users in the 1992 survey were between ages 13 and 15, down from between 14 and 17 the year before. It hasn't gone back up.

The effects are now clear, unlike in the '60s and '70s. Studies show smoking marijuana reduces coordination; slows reflexes and interferes with the ability to measure time, distance and speed.

Quantity is up. The article said kids today smoke larger amounts than we did, thanks to innovations such as "blunts," short cigars hollowed out and restuffed with pot.

Potency is up. It says the pot teens smoke today is not "their parents' cannabis." It often has twice the amount of THC or is laced with cocaine.

While I would not go back and relive those days any differently, I have changed my views about drugs. Now I don't consider even marijuana harmless.

But I don't agree with all four of those points. For instance, I don't know why they are suddenly coming up with the "findings" that smoking marijuana alters your sense of time and short-circuits your short-memory. Anyone who smoked in the past could tell you about that. And while I can't vouch for the potency of pot today, I will say we had our own versions of "laced" marijuana.

We'll never be a totally drug-free society. But what can we do to reduce the number of users?

A good friend of mine in Mississippi—who had seven children of her own—gave me two pieces of advice when my first son was much younger. One was to "pick your battles." Give kids control over "safe" areas in which they can rebel (hair length, clothes, etc.), and they'll be less likely to have to rebel with more risky behavior.

The second bit of advice was to be consistent. Set rules and stick by them, but don't be afraid to rethink them if the situation warrants it.

Keeping the lines of communication open with our kids is also important. I think the more we really listen to them and try to find out why they hold certain beliefs and ideas, the better off we'll be.

Nancy Reagan's ineffective "Just Say No" campaign didn't go far enough. Instead of telling the kids to say "no," we need to find out why they're saying "yes." And we can't do that if we're not willing to hear what they have to say.

Cougars end season with loss to IUPU-Ft. Wayne

Jeremy Paschall/Alestle

Ronnie Henderson was the star of the Cougars' final game, but his 27 points was not enough to prevent the Cougars from falling.

By Eli Savoie
Sports Editor

The SIUE men's basketball team completed their first season as a member of the Great Lakes Valley Conference by splitting their final two games on Feb. 29, and March 2.

On leap day, the Cougars defeated St. Joseph's 75-60 behind the strong play of Chris Harris and Jason Holmes. Harris tallied 20 points for the victory while Holmes pumped in 19. Tim Holloway and Ronnie Henderson rounded out a quartet of Cougars in double figures with 11 points each.

The Cougars started their spring break off on the wrong foot as they finished the season with a 90-88 loss to IUPU-Ft. Wayne.

In the contest, the Cougars once again received strong performances from Holmes and Harris with 25 and 14 points respectively.

The star of the show for SIUE however, was Henderson who poured in 27 points including 13-of-15 shooting from the free-throw line and two three pointers late in the game to pull the Cougars close.

The Cougars effort wasn't enough though, as the Mastadons were able to hold on for the two-point victory.

The loss dropped the Cougars final record for the season to 10-15 and 7-13 in the GLVC.

Looking back on the season, assistant coach Scott Eggleston said Monday that although the team hoped to do better, for all the players that were lost to injury and suspensions, the team's season wasn't too much of a disappointment.

One thing Eggleston did say the team needed was to bulk up some on the inside.

"The league taught us we need big guys," Eggleston said. "That's one area where we were thin. We got beat up a lot in the low post."

He added that weight training will be a big part of the Cougars' off season. The coaches want everyone to come into practice next year a little bigger.

Eggleston said that with all this year's players returning next season, and with the right additions, the team will be ready to make some noise in the GLVC.

"If we get the right recruits in, we can definitely be in the top half [of the conference] and maybe the top three or four," Eggleston said.

He added that the team will have to learn to be more consistent. He hopes that they can get to a point where they play with the same emotion every night instead of the roller coaster effect they had this season of up one game and down the next.

Only time will tell, but with the experience of one conference season under their belt and all their players returning, the future seems to be bright for the Cougars.

Four SIUE wrestlers headed to nationals

By Todd Spann
Assistant Sports Editor

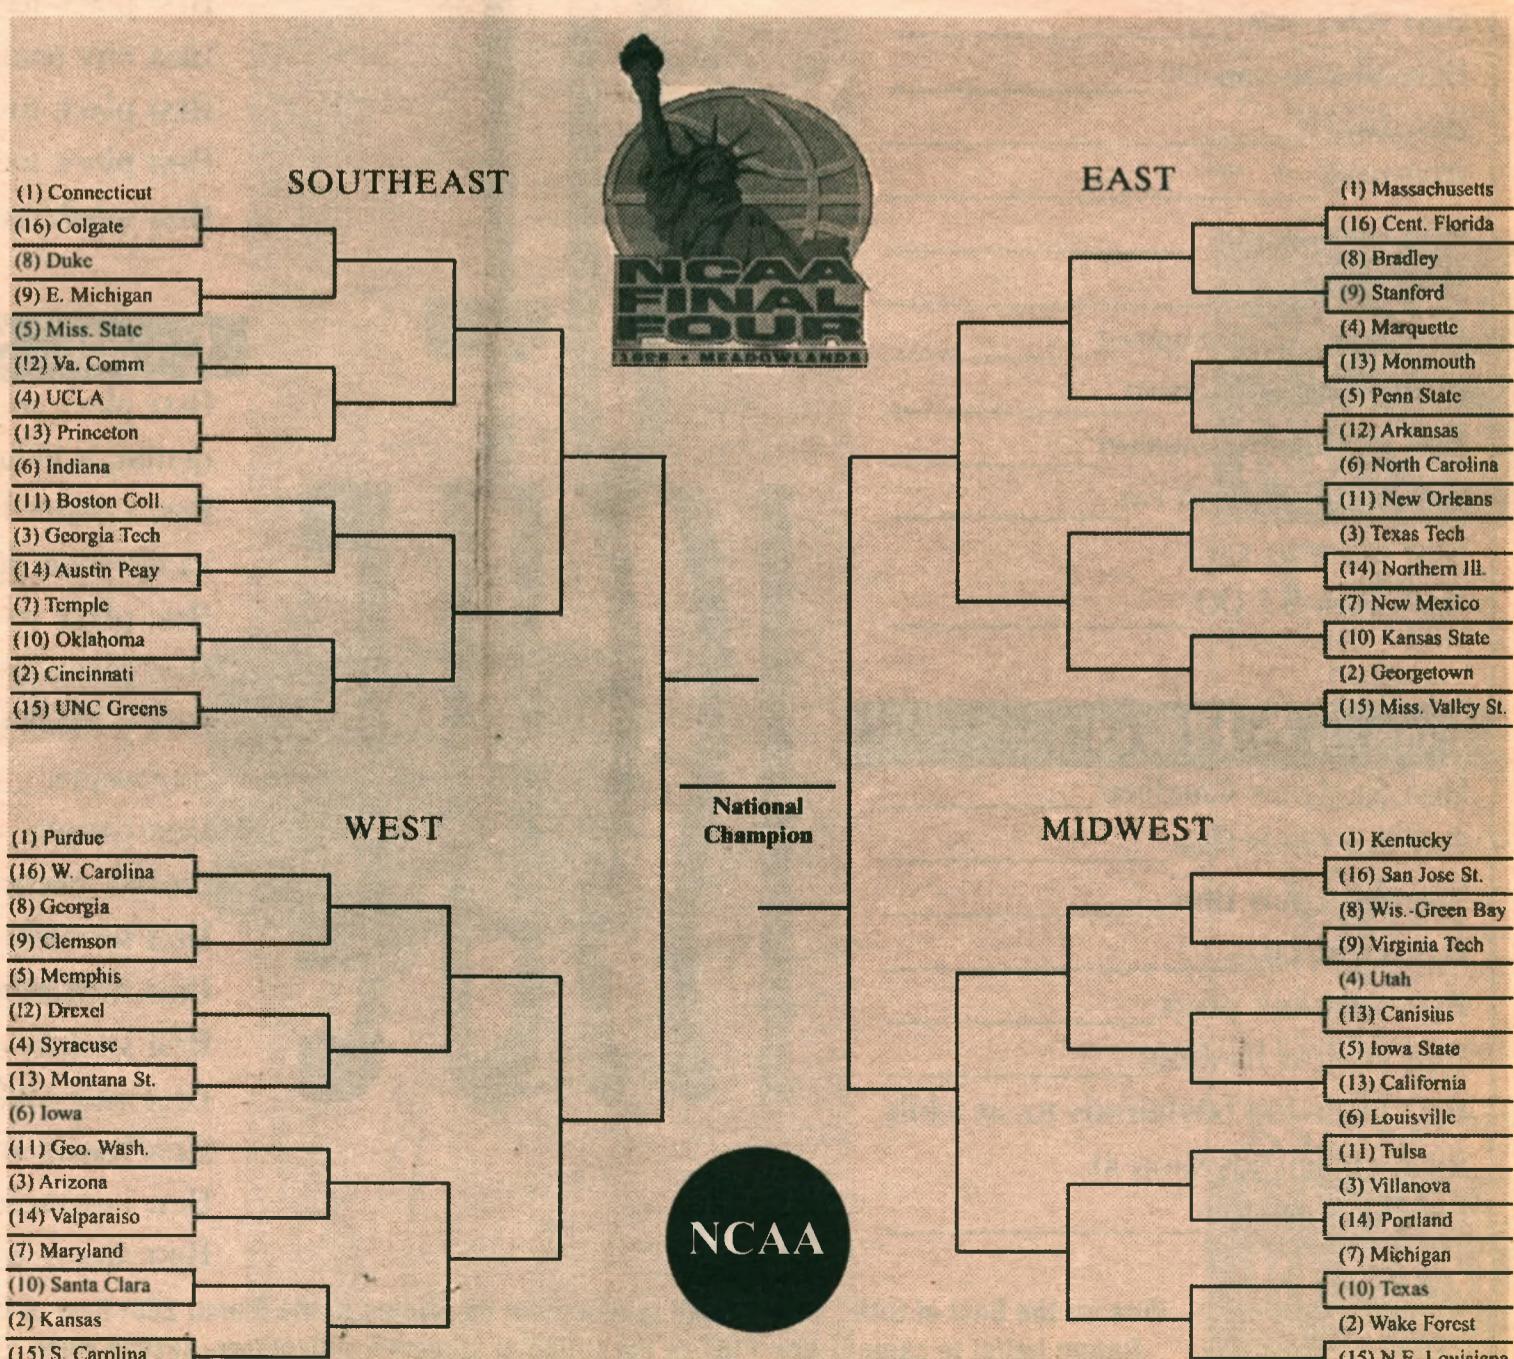

After the slow start this season due to injuries, the SIUE wrestling team is finishing strong by sending four wrestlers to the NCAA-II National Tournament at North Colorado University.

Brian Anderson, Jason Querciagrossa, Jim Czajkowski, and Jason Carter all qualified after finishing high in their respected weight classes.

Anderson finished 3rd in the 126 pound weight class while Querciagrossa took second in the 142 weight class along with Carter doing the same in the 190 pound class.

Czajkowski wrestled well and found himself taking first place at the tournament in the 167 pound weight class.

"There were 27 people to qualify for nationals out of 100 in the region. They take the first and second place

Terri Evans of the Cougars was honored for her outstanding play this season by being named first team all conference. Teammate Alicia Harkins was named as an honorable mention.

Evans breaks record to highlight final weekend

By Brett Licata
Sports Reporter

Terri Evans highlighted the end of the SIUE women's basketball season by breaking the Cougars' all-time career scoring mark on Feb. 29, at the Vadalabene Center. The historic feat happened at 14:44 of the first half in a 113-70 Cougar victory over St. Joseph's College. The new mark stands at 1,649 points.

Evans also tied her own record when she went six of seven from behind the three-point arch and finished the night with 19 points.

Sophomore Alicia Harkins had a career high 32 points and six rebounds and Beth Brown threw in 14 points. Cristina Loomis and Amy Mazner contributed 13 and 10 points respectively to round out the five players in double figures.

"We did a good job on the offensive boards," said head coach Wendy Hedberg. "Things were kind of falling in our hands which helped us for a lot of put backs."

The Cougars led by 28 points at halftime and never looked back. They shot 64 percent from the field and 73 percent from three point range in the final half.

finishers and seven wild cards. The coaches vote on who they think are the seven best wrestlers out of the third and fourth place finishers to determine the wild cards," Head Coach Larry Kristoff said Monday afternoon.

The Cougars finished the regional at second place just behind the NO. 1 team in the nation, which is Central Oklahoma.

The No. 4 ranked team in the nation of Wisconsin-Parkside came in and only finished fourth in the ten team tournament.

"What I am saying is that they didn't wrestle very well in the regional," Kristoff said.

Every year the regional tournament coaches vote on a regional coach of the year. After the votes were turned in, Kristoff and another coach, Robin Ersland, tied for the honor.

It does not look like anything will stand in the way of The four Cougar wrestlers who are going to Colorado. Kristoff says they are healthy and ready to go.

Two of the four wrestlers are going in with a national ranking. Anderson and Carter are both ranked eighth in the nation in their respected weight class.

The Cougars as a team earned a ranking of No. 20th in the NCAA Division II Wrestling Coaches Association top twenty poll at the end of the season.

A record of 3-7 looks deceiving but the Cougars had injury problems at the beginning of the season and had to forfeit several weight classes.

But with a healthy, full squad, the Cougars defeated some of the top wrestlers in the country when they faced Central Oklahoma and look to give a good performance at the NCAA-II National Tournament March 15-16.

Asked if these rankings would give the wrestlers any added confidence, Kristoff simply said, "Na."

"Our transition game worked well," said Hedberg. "We came out early and played hard. We were really smart in the open floor."

On Saturday, March 2, the Cougars fell to IUPU-Ft. Wayne 71-65 in their last contest of the season. Four SIUE players finished in double figures including Evans with 16 in her last game at SIUE. Harkins had 15 points, junior Amy Tuetken concluded her year with an 11 point performance and Pinckneyville's Leslie Phillips scored 12.

The Lady Cougars ended their season with an overall record of 15-11 and a Great Lakes Valley Conference record of 10-10.

A pair of Cougars were given postseason awards by the GLVC as Evans was named first-team all-conference and Harkins was named to the team as an honorable mention.

Assistant coach Nancy Swain said Monday over the phone about the past year, "We had hoped for a better record, but we played some tough competition this season."

"I'd like to see the team come into next season in better condition," said Swain. "We will need to play more consistent and cut down on our turnovers."

Runners fail to qualify in last attempt for nationals

By Todd Spann
Assistant Sports Editor

SIUE track runners had one more shot at qualifying for nationals over the break but could not do any better than just having solid performances at the Indiana USA track and field indoor championships.

"The runners that did go had solid performances like they always do but did not achieve the national standard we were looking for," head coach Darryl Frerker said Monday morning in his office.

Travis Roundcount ran for 5th place in the one mile race while teammate Gus Coronado placed 4th in the 5,000-meter run.

"Gus didn't run quite as well as he wanted to. He was off his time a little bit," Frerker said.

Placing fifth in the 3,000-meter was Jason Gass and in the 800-meter Wayne Bloemer ran for a 9th place finish.

Luke Lay ran in two races during the meet with a 7th place finish in the 200 and 14th place in the 400.

"Out of some of these places we ran strong. And we competed largely against Division I schools and that can make a bit of a difference," Frerker said about the competition at Bloomington, Ind.

The Cougars only competed in one event on the women's side of the field.

Vicki Johnson took first place in the 3,000-meter run.

"This was a good race on her part," Frerker said.

Not having anybody qualify for nationals means the indoor season is over for the Cougars and now they will focus more on the outdoor season.

The first meet will be at the end of the month at the Washington Invitational in St. Louis, Mo.
