Senator Hobson blindly proposes fee cuts

Hobson offers a motion to take student fees away from Student Publication in effort to fire director

By Melanie Adams
Assistant News Editor

Randy Hobson has written a motion to be presented for discussion at the student senate meeting March 29 regarding the elimination of the position of Director of Student Publications.

Hobson said the reasoning behind this proposal is due to his observation of the paper in the last few months.

"Over the last few months I have noticed many errors in stories and basic information put out by the newspaper and I have had the opportunity to talk with both Roy Gilmore (Editor-in-Chief) and Terry Signorello (Director of Student Publications) regarding these mistakes," Hobson said.

"Terry's answer to my questions have been that he has no control and no responsibility over the content of the newspaper and the basic idea behind all of this is if he does not feel that he should be advising Roy when things go wrong we might better use money being spent for his salary to pay for other things," Hobson said.

Hobson also said if the newspaper is none of Signorello's business, then we need to spend the student fee money in a better way.

He also suggested that the money from the Director of Student Publications' salary should be used to pay for outside consultants on the paper, and for more reporters and proof-readers to assist the Editor-in-Chief with his/her responsibilities.

Hobson added that he feels that Signorello is not giving good guidance in controlling reporters, and is lacking in training and the retaining of reporters.

Signorello said he does not know what motivated Hobson to make such a proposal and for all practical purposes thought he was on the same wavelength since they had been working on the idea of a campus yearbook together. Hobson, during the February 23 senate meeting, applauded the efforts of the Publication Staff in trying to bring back the yearbook.

Signorello also said that he does not know if it was an election stunt, but the two had exchanged words over a particular article three weeks prior to the writing of the proposal, although he did not feel that the exchange was that significant.

Republican candidates hold public debate at SIUE

By David Weil
News Reporter

Seven Republican candidates competing for the Republican candidacy for the upcoming election of the 20th Congressional district met in the Meridian Room of the University Center on Friday, March 15, for a public debate.

The event was sponsored by the Current Affairs Committee under the guidance of the University Center Board. The Edwardsville Intelligencer also co-sponsored the event.

SIUE student Sean Pohl, the current affairs chairperson, hosted the evening and Melissa Ritter of the Edwardsville Intelligencer served as the moderator for the debate.

The seven candidates present were: Rick Angel, Patrick Baikauskas, Rich Green, Carl Oblinger, Bill Owens, John Shimkus, and Bill Zerkle.

The debate began with each candidate giving a two minute prepared statement. While the candidates were all of the same political party, it was apparent from the opening statements that their political agendas were quite different.

The first question in the debate concerned cutbacks in federal college loans and scholarships. The candidates were all in agreement that education should be a national priority, but they differed on the

Serb gangs set fires

•Smoke spiraled from the last Serb-held area of Sarajevo Sunday night. Gangs of Serb toughs set buildings ablaze, raped old women and ransacked apartments in a final spasm of violence before the stretch of battered high-rises returns to Muslim control on Tuesday.

Teen charged in Florida killing

•A teenager was charged with murder Sunday in the fatal shooting of a Canadian student on a Daytona Beach, Fla., spring break. Donald Shoup, 18, of Ormond Beach, Fla., stopped a police officer early Sunday and told him he was wanted in the slaying of 19-year-old Mark Fyke of Belleville, Ontario, police said.

Einstein manuscript fails to sell

•Albert Einstein's handwritten manuscript on the theory of relativity failed to sell at a New York auction Saturday, as bids fell short of the secret minimum selling price. Sotheby's had hoped to sell the 72-page manuscript, written in German in 1912, for $4 million to $6 million. The manuscript first sold in 1987 for $1.2 million.

Madison woman dies after car overturns

• A Madison woman died Saturday afternoon in St. Louis County after being ejected from her car, the Missouri State Highway Patrol said. Burnadette Brandon, 24, of Madison was killed when her car crossed three lanes of Interstate 270 and overturned in a ditch, the patrol said. At least three other people died in accidents on Missouri roads this weekend.

GM, UAW continue talks over shutdown

• Negotiators for General Motors Corp. and a striking United Auto Workers union met on Sunday for a third straight day in an attempt to end a strike that has shut down GM production across North America. Both sides have refused to indicate whether any progress has been made. It is the longest sustained communication since 2,700 workers walked out March 5, primarily over the issue of outsourcing—the production of parts by outside plants or companies. The union fears the practice could eliminate GM jobs. The automaker says outsourcing, because it can be cheaper, is necessary to remain competitive.

Attacks by Tamil rebels leave 19 dead

• Tamil rebels attacked a police outpost and a military camp in northeast Sri Lanka, sparking clashes that killed at least 11 policemen and soldiers and eight rebels, the military said Sunday.

Five policemen were killed and 11 were injured in Saturday night's attack on the police post in the Polonnaruwa district, about 120 miles from the capital of Colombo. Rebel casualties were not known.

Earlier Saturday, rebels attacked a military camp in the Halawewawa village, about 140 miles from the capital, killing six soldiers. Troops retaliated with mortar and artillery fire, killing at least eight rebels.

The Tamil Tiger rebels are fighting for a separate homeland for Tamils.

Correction

In last Thursday's issue, a letter to the editor written by Jim Murphy contained several typing errors. The date should have read 2/29 instead of 3/29, within the article and $100,000+ instead of $10,000+.

Also, the name one of the candidates running for student senate was misspelled. The name should have read Lamont Bankston instead of Lamont Blankston. The Alestle regrets the error.

Check facts before drawing conclusion about ID Center

This is a letter in response to a letter to the editor written in the March 12, 1996 Alestle by Jim Stout, Graduate Assistant/Student. I wanted to correct Stout on his information concerning his University ID Card.

The cost for a University ID Card is not incorporated into the tuition and fees paid by students. However, this is wonderful idea that the University should explore. The University provides your ID Card to you free of charge, and consequently it is the property of SIUE.

Upon receiving an ID Card, students, faculty and staff sign an agreement that, among other things, states that they agree to pay the replacement fee if that card is lost, stolen or damaged. As I write this response to you, I am overlooking your signed agreement.

I understand your frustration in these matters, but you should check your facts before you draw conclusions.

ISA wants to thank everyone involved in Cricket World Cup and Essay Contest

The Indian Student Association would like to thank all the viewers that participated in the Wills World Cup Cricket matches. A personal congratulations to the Sri Lanka Cricket team, the 1996 Cricket World Cup Champions.

Through the hard work of the Indian Student Association and the Vadalabene staff, contributions by the Student Government, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, and the Bagel Tree restaurant, the matches were viewed for the first time at SIUE.

The Indian Student Association would also like to thank Mary Robinson, Mick Ostrander, and Ann Schonlau for the time and dedication they took to make this experience successful. We hope the same result will occur in the Cricket World Cup 2000.

The Indian Student Association would also like to congratulate the winners of the Essay Contest. The topic for the essay was Unity Amidst The Cultural and Social Diversity In India Today: Myth or Reality?

The first place trophy and $50 check went to Nagraj Rajaram and the second place trophy went to Raghu Dasari and Srinivas Aduri.

The Indian Association would like to thank the judges, Betty Richardson, Ronald Schaefer and Donald Thompson for participating in this event.

The Indian Student Association would also like to thank Dr. Narayan Swamy for monitoring the event, and all the other essay participants.

Student tired of Housing and Police departments

I am writing this letter to complain about two departments on this campus—the SIUE Police Department and University Housing.

First of all, I will give you some background information as to why I am voicing these complaints.

I live at Tower Lake, and this past October, we discovered that a roommate of mine had stolen another roommate's Call Edge card and ran up over $200 worth of phone calls on it. When we discovered this had happened, my roommate that stole the card was confronted, became upset, packed a few things, and said that she would pay back the money to my roommate. She also said that she would be back the next day for the remainder of her things. That was the last time that we saw her.

We spoke with someone from Housing and were told that once she stopped paying for the apartment and did not come for her things, they would make sure that her things would be moved out. Several times in the past few months we have spoken with housing about this; however, we are still walking around her things. Housing even sent a letter to the apartment to inform us that they would be coming to get her things, and we have been verbally promised this on several occasions. Unfortunately, we have never seen a member of the Housing staff come to our apartment for this reason. We are tired of getting the run-around by the Housing Office, and would like for them to finally live up to their promises.

As far as the campus police's role in this situation, the night that this was discovered, my roommate who had her card stolen called the police to press charges. Initially, an officer came and made a report of the incident. A few days later, another officer came to the apartment and got a written statement from both my roommate and myself. This was the last time that we heard anything from the police department.

Several weeks ago, my roommate received a letter from Call Edge telling her that the bill must be paid or she would not receive her grades. Since she did not make the calls, she called the police and was told that they were "continuing the investigation."

What exactly does that mean? The police department has the perpetrator's permanent address and phone number ... surely in the past five months they could have contacted her to see what she was planning to do regarding the incident. To the best of our knowledge that has not taken place, because we have not heard of this happening.

To us, it does not seem as if the police are very interested in getting my roommate's money back to her and closing this case. I know that the police department has been busy in the past few months with the phone fraud incident, and that a million dollar debt is far greater than a $200 one, but to a struggling college student, $200 can in fact seem like a million dollars. To me, it seems as if SIUE is more interested in getting money for themselves than protecting the welfare of its students and that doesn't seem quite fair. This makes me wonder: how many other cases regarding students remain untouched?

To University Housing and the SIUE Police Department: my roommates and I have suffered long enough because of this matter. It would be nice if our ex-roommate's things could be moved out, and that my roommate could somehow get her money back.

We feel as if we have been lied to by both of these departments over and over again. We are tired of not being listened to, and we feel as if we are being punished because of the actions of someone else.

Abdul-Rauf didn't stand long for his belief

In the March 14 edition of The Alestle, Editor Roy Gilmore blasted the NBA's suspension of Denver Nuggets point guard Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf. Abdul-Rauf, formerly known as Chris Jackson, defied the NBA by failing to obey one of the rules which states that players, coaches and trainers must "stand and line up in a dignified posture" during the US and Canadian national anthem.

Gilmore's article defending the actions of Abdul-Rauf was, at best, weak. Comparing Abdul-Rauf's actions to those of drunken fans was logically inept. Abdul-Rauf entered into a contract; an "agreement, esp. a written one enforceable by law, between two or more people," as defined by Webster. The contract basically is a simple one. By following the rules and maintaining his level of play, Abdul-Rauf would receive an amount of money that most Americans will not see during their lifetime. The drunken fans were not being paid to "stand and line up in a dignified posture." Abdul-Rauf was.

Gilmore attempted to make the issue patriotism. The reason Abdul-Rauf was fined was because he didn't follow his contract, not that he wasn't showing the proper amount of patriotism. I have no objection to Abdul-Rauf's desire to express his opinion that the American flag is a "symbol of oppression, of tyranny." However, if he decides to break his contract, he should not expect a paycheck.

The American dream is what Chris Jackson sought. He was rewarded for his hard work with the opportunity to play in the NBA, and the money to make life easier for his family and himself. It is this dream that Abdul-Rauf is claiming that oppresses him.

On March 14, Abdul-Rauf announced that he would stand for the national anthem. When I heard the announcement I thought I must have missed something. One day, Abdul-Rauf claims that his religion will not allow him to stand. After a few days of not being paid, Abdul-Rauf states that, although he is not conceding, he will stand. Maybe now he will close his eyes in protest, or possibly even hum aloud while placing his fingers in his ears.

To clear up confusion on his position on the newspaper, Signorello gave a description of his advisor role.

"My duty is to advise the Editor-in-Chief and in this advisement role, to assist the Editor-in-Chief to train the newspaper staff," Signorello said. "It is true that I do not have editorial control. I do have a responsibility to advise the Editor-in-Chief on what is liable and obscene and other related issues, which I do on a regular basis."

Signorello further explained his position by saying that he has the responsibility to deal with issues that arise and he take this responsibility very seriously.

Signorello also added that when there are mistakes on the pages of the paper, they are not due to poor advisement on his part, but because of the individual who is responsible for committing the errors.

Signorello continued on by saying that the boundaries of his position are not only dictated by the university's policies and procedures, but also by what the Editor-in-Chief designates and allows above and beyond his defined responsibility.

"I have worked with some editors-in-chief who would not allow suggestions on writing, or even to look at the pages before they went to print," Signorello said.

Signorello dispelled Hobson's theory on the use of student fees since members of the Alestle staff, including himself, are not paid through student fees but through advertising generated through the paper.

Hobson cited that a campus newspaper, in his opinion, is designed as a balance between outside news sources and a promotional media for events, with related stories on these events.

Hobson also said that the Alestle has had several, if not many, articles in the recent past that have been inaccurate, not stating actual events, and feels part of the problem with the paper stems from the fact that most of the reporting is done after the event.

"It is correct that a lot of events on campus don't have reporters covering them, and there are several reasons why," Signorello responded. "One reason is the lack of announcements given to the paper about the scheduled events, and another reason is that there aren't enough student reporters to cover these events."

Signorello added, "There aren't enough students on campus who are willing to give the time and effort the members of our staff do to cover the events. Also, it is the Editor-in-Chief's job to prioritize what is newsworthy or not."

"If Randy knows of any students who want to work for the paper on a volunteer basis, they are welcome to come write, and we'll provide the training needed," Signorello said.

methods they advocated for education's improvement.

Owens took the firmest stance against nationally distributed school loan programs by saying that there is absolutely nothing in the constitution of the United States that says the federal government should be involved with education to begin with.

"I think, if at all possible, colleges and universities should seek out private sources for funding," Owens explained.

However, the rest of the field supported some sort of national education funding.

"If it wasn't for the Federal Student Loan Program, I would have never been able to receive the education that I have," Oblinger added.

The candidates were again divided over the question of support for U.S. troops in Bosnia. The only candidate to support the Bosnian mission 100 percent was Baikauskas.

"We have a strategic interest in assuring that Europe is secure," he said. "There was genocide occurring and I think we have to recognize that."

However, Angel said that he felt the reports of genocide had been exaggerated and that we were allowed to fight our civil war and they should be allowed to fight theirs.

All but two candidates said that they would support Newt Gingrich's budget proposal, citing the need to curtail spending and control the federal deficit. Owens, however, felt that Gingrich's plan did not go far enough.

"I think it is irresponsible to try to balance the budget in seven years. I think it could be done in two or three," Owens said.

Baikauskas also expressed his disagreement for the Gingrich budget plan but for different reasons.

"There were increases in the defense budget. There were provisions for tax cuts which we cannot afford right now," he said.

The candidates were in agreement that congressional perks were creating a rise in cynicism among American voters but disagreed on how to attack the problem. With the exception of Zerkle and Baikauskas, the candidates were willing to state that they would refuse to accept any perks or pay raises while in Washington.

Zerkle stopped short of refusing perks, but did say, "I think Congress should treat itself like any other government employees. It could restore the public's faith in government."

Baikauskas pointed out that without paid support, congressional representatives would be limited to the wealthy who could afford to serve without public support.

The candidates were in agreement on the abortion issue with the exception of Oblinger, who felt that even though he was personally opposed to abortion, he doesn't feel we can legislate morality.

The one issue all candidates could agree on was finance reform for campaigns and the problems caused by negative campaigning. The candidates felt that campaign finance reform could level the playing field for all candidates. They also stressed that negative campaigning removed the focus in many situations from the issues.

After brief closing statements by the candidates, Pohl again thanked both the candidates and all in attendance before wrapping up the meeting.

He said, "The winner today is the same winner that we had at the Democratic Primary, the voters."

After the meeting, attendees were invited to stay to meet the candidates or to find out information about the new College Republicans.

Delta Sigma Theta sponsors forum on issues facing black women

By David Weil
News Reporter

Delta Sigma Theta sponsored a forum on current issues facing black women on Thursday, March 14, in the Multi-function room of the Residence Hall. The event was organized by Flora Carson of Delta Sigma Theta as part of Women's History Month.

The forum was intended to highlight areas of concern within the black community of SIUE. Angela Scott, also from Delta Sigma Theta, said, "I think people need to be aware of the issues facing black women. We can use the advice of people who have already been through some of these things."

On hand to share their experiences and observations were: Dr. Dallas Browne, Dr. Vanessa Browne, Dr. Sandiata Cha-Jua, Dr. Earleen Patterson, Dr. James T. Jackson, Dr. Shirley Portwood, Dr. Shrylene Clark and Professor Eugene Redmond, all faculty members at SIUE.

After welcoming all in attendance, the first issue discussed was, "Is there a lack of responsible black men in the community?"

"Sometimes sisters are looking in all the wrong places for responsible black men," Dr. Dallas Browne said.

The discussion focused on what black women need to look for in a man. Even though, as Dr. Cha-Jua pointed out, almost one in three young black men are incarcerated, the panel agreed that if black women focus on the right qualities, they can still find a responsible black man.

"Let your heart and head work together. If you know what you want, you're going to find it," said Dr. Jackson.

The panel also discussed the question, "How does the self-esteem of the black women affect her success in society?"

Dr. Jackson emphasized the importance of self-esteem by saying, "Lack of self-esteem will not allow you to be successful. It will not happen."

The importance of self-esteem outside of the workplace was also emphasized by Dr. Clark when she said, "Only when you respect yourself can you respect others."

The final topic of the evening was, "What is the current state of sisterhood within the community and what can be done to strengthen it?"

The panel agreed that black women have traditionally been viewed as a strength in the black community. The panel also pointed out that competition between black women could hinder the community as a whole.

"We as sisters need to empower each other," said Dr. Vanessa Browne. "Don't compete with each other. We all bring different things to the table."

In closing, Carson read a quote stating, "Show me how a country treats its women and I'll show you their progress as a nation." Carson went on to recite a poem she had composed, emphasizing the need for self-reliance for black women.

Women's Studies courses on the rise at SIUE

By Jennifer Casey
Assistant Lifestyle Editor and
Danette Watt
Lifestyle Reporter

In 1970, Richard Nixon was in the White House. Four students were killed and nine were injured at Kent State University in Ohio during a protest of the involvement of United States troops in Viet Nam. Kurt Vonnegut wrote the screenplay for "Between Time and Timbuktu." The Kansas City Chiefs defeated the Minnesota Vikings in Superbowl IV. And the first women's studies program was established at San Diego State University. By 1990, there were 621 such programs nationwide. Not surprisingly, 99 percent of those programs are headed by women.

In 1975, SIUE began its own Women's Studies program, largely through the efforts of Sheila Ruth and Rosanda Richards-Ellsworth of the Philosophy department. The minor began as an outgrowth of a class Ruth had offered in 1973. That class, "Issues in Feminism: An Introduction to Women's Studies" was also the title of a book Ruth, now a professor, had written about the same time.

Historically, women's experiences have been under-valued and their achievements have been overlooked.

"Black studies gave African-Americans a chance to explore their heritage, but there wasn't much opportunity for women," Barbara Schmidt, associate professor of English language and literature, said. Schmidt is the current coordinator of the Women's Studies program.

"It gives women a sustained opportunity to look at a subject matter from another perspective. It allows women to examine issues in a comfortable environment," she added.

In a lecture given the summer of 1994, Ruth noted that "In the study of women, women are objects. In Women's Studies, women are the subject."

Getting the program accepted was a real struggle, Schmidt said, "but once it was, Sheila Ruth was fairly quickly able to establish it."

The criticism back then was basically what it still is:

that serious research isn't done in women's studies; nothing of substance is offered; and it's just a "touchy, feely" program with a lot of male-bashing.

Unfortunately, there is still a lot of the same criticism.

"So we needed to ask ourselves, what is legitimate and how can it be portrayed as legitimate? Women who worked in the women's studies program were looked upon as not really working. These views were held by a good number of women as well as men," Schmidt said.

The growth of SIUE's women's studies program has been slow but steady, although it has experienced its share of setbacks and changes.

In 1978, a Graduate Specialization in Women's Studies, Master of Philosophy was begun (it has since been dropped). That same year, the first brochure advertising the program was printed.

"At times, we tried to get a specialization in at the Master's level, but getting the cooperation from the various disciplines involved has never worked out. Once the College of Arts and Sciences is really in place, there might be another opportunity because the departments would be housed in one building," Schmidt said.

Currently, there are three courses offered at the master's level — "Women and Language," "Women in Administration," and "Theories and Methods of Women's Studies."

In October 1979, Margaret Simon, now a professor in the philosophy department, had a half-hour show on WSIE. "Concerning Women" ran for six

Students give views on Women's Studies courses

In order to further understand the impact that the Women's Studies program and its curriculum makes on the student body, the Alestle surveyed members of Patricia Pound's PSYC405 class, entitled "Psychology of Women." Students were asked about other women's studies classes that they had taken, how they felt about such classes, and what they felt they were getting out of the class or classes they had taken.

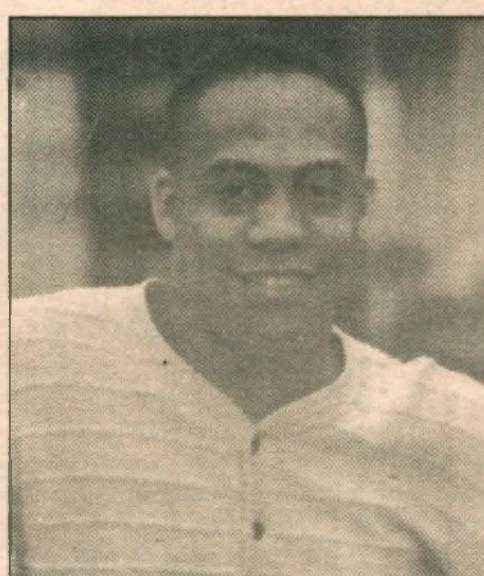

PSYC405 is student Melissa Peel's first women's studies course. When asked about her views toward the curriculum, Peel responded that, "I have enjoyed this class very much and I would take other women's directed courses. My eyes have been opened to how we are socialized and why we play the roles we do."

Janice Wade, a junior with a double major in psychology and sociology, is also a first-time taker of a women's studies course this semester. "It challenges my thinking whether I agree with it or not. All should take like classes in order to be challenged," said Wade in reference to PSYC405.

Brandi Rowe, a junior with a major in communications, has taken women's studies courses prior to this semester. "This is my second women's studies course. It's great to chat about women's issues. Women's issues are important and all women need to be aware of what's going on and how to help themselves," said Rowe.

Jennifer Ward is also a veteran student in women's studies class. Ward spoke about the differences within the curriculum. "Women, Gender, and Society in the sociology department was more of a women's history class on what women had done as far as women's rights and movements. Psychology of Women is a much more light class. It talks about women's issues. I think these classes are very important for males and females. I also think that it should be a required class," Ward said.

Aimee Irvin, a senior majoring in early childhood education, responded enthusiastically about the course. "I have really enjoyed this class. It is the only women's class I have taken, and after taking this, I would be interested in taking more women's studies. I have really enjoyed learning about women's issues. Some I was aware of, but others were shocking. I wish there were more men in here to give feedback."

Women's studies courses are about women, but enrollment is not limited to females only. One of the four men enrolled in this particular section of PSYC405 is senior and sociology major Brian Peete.

Peete enrolled in the class to fulfill a psychology elective and because he thought it would be a "fun one to get into."

"I think these classes are very enlightening and actually show men the things that they do to oppress women. Even men that don't think they are "jerks" can see the little things they do to contribute to inequality," said Peete, giving his general interpretation on the class.

Peete went on to discuss the strengths of the class. He said that he likes that the class shows the unconscious tendencies of men and their attitudes towards women. When asked about the negative points of the class, he said that there is not anything he does not like about it.

On his instructor, Patricia Pound, Peete said that she is "straightforward; she has her own opinions but does not force them on the class. She lets you think for yourself."

Peete said that taking this class has changed his attitude in many ways and has helped him to understand women a lot better.

"So many guys say that they don't understand women. This class provides a way for them to learn how to do that," he said.

His advice for other males who may consider taking PSYC405 or any other women's studies courses was this: "More men should take these classes. Learn about yourself and the world you live in. This class focuses on a lot of labels and stereotypes that men put on women that they are not aware of."

years, during which she led discussions and interviewed people on a number of topics.

"My first show was on rape prevention and prosecution," Simon said. There was also one on women in the ministry, women and money management, lesbian rights.... I don't know how many people actually listened to it. It was taped earlier and ran during the evening commute."

Simon also was the first editor of "Hypatia," a journal of feminist philosophy that opened its editorial office at SIUE in 1984. She held that position for about five years, when the editorship rotated to the University of Indiana and then on to Florida.

At first, the women's studies program was housed in the philosophy department. In 1988, under the recommendation of a university ad hoc Committee on Women's Studies, it was moved to the School of Social Sciences (now the College of Arts and Sciences). An office was provided along with part-time secretarial and student assistance.

The position of program coordinator rotates. It began with Sheila Ruth and went on to include faculty from the department of Earth Science and Geography, English and Art and Design.

Funding has always been a problem for the program. Except for two fiscal years, FY 89 and FY 90, when the program received $15,000 both years, it has operated without official funding. With the extra funding those two years, the program was able to increase the number of lectures and workshops. This resulted in 15 new courses and 17 new faculty members. The number of minors enrolled in the program jumped from 192 in FY 89 to 333 in FY 90. That was the last funding the program received. A new budget proposal is being worked on now.

A Friends of Women's Studies Fund was initiated through the SIUE Foundation to keep the momentum going.

In 1989, a New Program Request was submitted to provide a state supported budget for Women's Studies. The request was designed to enhance planning and coordination of the courses, disseminate information about the program, promote academic excellence in all the disciplines, advise students and sponsor lectures and seminars.

It also included a request for funds to initiate a Women's Center. This was to be a place where women could exchange information, find a support network and offer special programs and information similar to Women's Resource Centers at Washington University and the University of Missouri-St.Louis.

The initial request was returned with a recommendation to separate the service component from the academic component. A new request was submitted in 1990 and was rejected.

Today, the women's studies program offers 27 courses, including Women in Art: Middle Ages to World War II, Social Philosophy of the Women's Movement and the African-American Woman in African-American Literature.

The most recent addition to the roster of courses is professor Nora Baker's Women in Mass Communications. It's being offered for the first time this semester.

"I wanted to do this about eight years ago, but when I first suggested it, it was only Bill Ward and I teaching journalism classes. So we were overwhelmed already. I've been studying this topic for the past ten years," she said.

UMSL and SLU are co-hosting a National Women's Studies conference for June 1997. Four faculty members are working on the committee. Schmidt said this is an ideal opportunity for women faculty in the geographic area to meet and share resources.

Schmidt hopes the current administration will continue to be supportive.

"Chancellor Belck was hired in on her diversity issues, so whether we want to say Lazerson wasn't supportive (and he wasn't), he was hired in by the Board of Trustees to work on other things. The Board hired her with diversity in mind," she said.

"Perhaps with Chancellor Belck's and Dean Hahs' support, it will be possible to make more resources available to the program."

You'll gain valuable experience, and a lot of character references.

Wrestlers end season with two All-Americans

Melissa Wathen/Alestle

The SIUE wrestling team sent four people to the Division II nationals and two came home with All-American honors.

Softball fares well in Classic

By Brett Licata
Sports Reporter

The SIUE Lady Cougars hosted their own tournament this past weekend at the Collinsville Sports Complex. The Cougar Classic featured 11 other schools which included two pools.

The Cougars played in Pool A with Southern Indiana, Ferris State, Northeast Missouri State, Northwood, and Southwest Baptist. Pool B saw the likes of Quincy, Hillsdale, Indianapolis, Northwest Missouri State, Missouri-St. Louis, and Central (Iowa).

SIUE started their tournament on Friday with a 3-2 victory over Southwest Baptist, then continued to roll past Southern Indiana, 5-1. The Cougars ended the day by losing to Northwood 5-3.

SIUE rebounded on Saturday by beating Northeast Missouri State 3-1 and Ferris State 5-2.

There are two new All-Americans walking the SIUE campus this week as Brian Anderson and Jayson Querciagrossa both finished 8th in their respective weight brackets in the 1996 NCAA-Division II National Wrestling Championships at the University of Northern Colorado.

The Cougars had four wrestlers go to Colorado, but Jim Czajkowski and Jason Carter just couldn't make it out of their bracket. Carter, however, did receive recognition for his outstanding efforts in the classroom, making him an Academic All-American. He has posted an 3.57 GPA while majoring in biology.

In the 126-pound bracket, Anderson lost his first match to the No. 3 seed of the tournament, Braumon Creighton, who eventually captured 5th place.

"He could have won the match, but he missed a chance to take the kid down, which would of won him the match," head coach Larry Kristoff said about Anderson's match over the weekend.

Anderson then went on to the consolation bracket where he got a bye the first round and then defeated Adam Feldman of South Dakota State 4-1.

The next wrestler Anderson faced was Marc Schulze of Mankato State where he lost 4-1 and was sent to the seventh place match against Carlos Sumulong of San Francisco State. Anderson lost by a fall to give him eighth place.

All year Querciagrossa has been up and down in his wrestling, posting a 15-14 record. But like all good wrestlers, he knows when to shine.

"It was the desire to win," Kristoff said. "He knew what he had to do."

After losing the first round in the 142-pound bracket to the No. 5 seed, Querciagrossa buckled down and won the next two matches to give him a shot at seventh place.

In the final match of his career in an SIUE uniform, the senior lost a close match against Shippensburg's Matt Mentzer 3-0 to give him the eighth place trophy.

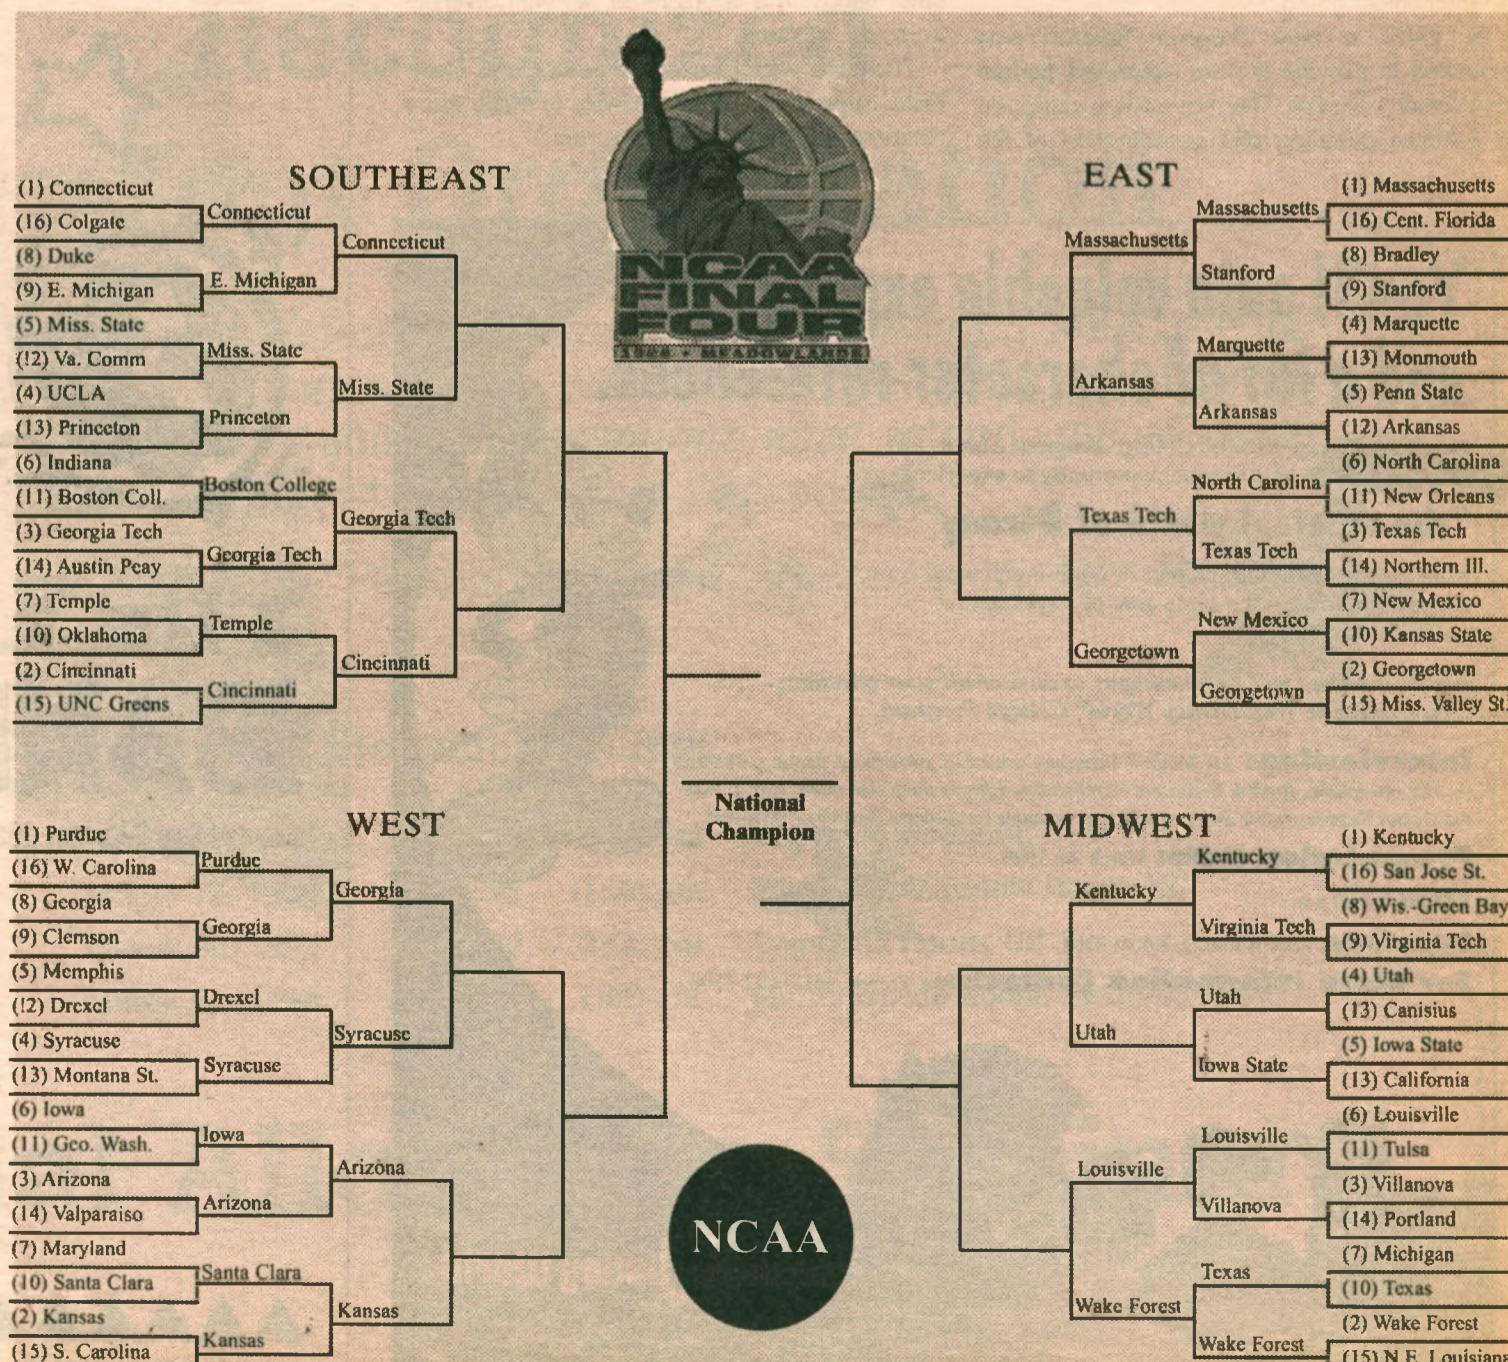

Carter of the 190-pound bracket probably got the hardest first round match-up of anybody as he went up against the No. 1 seed and eventual champion Chad Lamer of South Dakota State.

Needless to say, Carter lost his first round, but rebounded in his second match against Tyler Trieglaff of Moorhead State. He then lost the next match to seventh seed Doug Keldson of Portland State.

"I am really pleased with the way he wrestled. He caught the No. 1 wrestler in the first round, but then he came back and won his next match and then came back after that and lost his next one. But he wrestled a good match."

"He may have lost that last match, but I don't get upset when a wrestler wrestles to the best of his potential. I do get upset when they don't wrestle up to their potential," Kristoff said.

come back to haunt them because Northwood ended with the same record as SIUE in Pool A with 4 wins and 1 loss. But since Northwood defeated the Cougars head-to-head, Northwood became the champions of the pool.

"I believe we could have handled Northwood if we would have played to our potential," said head coach Sandy Montgomery.

Quincy prevailed as the champions of the tournament with an 11-5 victory over Northwood.

"We played really well for the field that we were up against," said Montgomery.

SIUE now sits with a 10-5 overall record. The team has rescheduled their Tuesday game against IUPU-Indianapolis for Thursday because of threatening weather. The Lady Cougars will start Great Lakes Valley Conference play this weekend in Owensboro, Kentucky.

Czajkowski came into the tournament with a No. 6 seed and some high expectations. He took his first match, but then lost in the second round to Roy Dillow of Colorado Mines, who eventually won the tournament in the 167-pound bracket.

"I thought Jim would beat him, but he just ran out of gas," Kristoff said. "He still had a chance to place, but he once again ran out of gas against a kid from Wisconsin-Parkside (Mylas Muckerheide)."

All and all, this was a good end for Cougar wrestling which started off with a lot of injuries and now ends with some All-Americans.

Intramural March Madness

The SIUE intramural program had its version of March Madness last week as there were postseason tournaments for the three leagues. In the 6-foot league, it was Da Chronic beating Court Masters 62-55 for the championship, but the Court Masters got revenge in the open league with a 77-61 victory over Da Chronic in the title game. The women's championship was won by Dazed and Confused as they knocked off Da Chronettes 31-30.

Watch how one act of kindness can lighten up the day for the recipient!

Take A Walk On The Wild Side 12:30 PM - 1:30 PM

What's green and brown and has walking trails all over the place? The Sweet Williams Trail! Take a hike with Ann Schonlau into the forested hills of campus. Find out where the trails take you and learn about the foliage that shades you as you exercise. Meet at the University Center, downstairs in the lobby in front of the Cougar Den (next to the food!). Rain/snow/tornado location will be at the Student Fitness Center indoor "trail".

These events are brought to you by the University Wellness Program

BACCHUS

THE FUN BEGINS WITH JOINING!

Just by joining you are registered to win a $5 prize. Simply pick up a National Alcohol Awareness Month button TODAY at the Health and Wellness Fair in the UC. Remember the answer to the question given at the time; if a BACCHUS member spots you wearing your button during the month of April--answer the question and win!

If you are interested in social activities supporting responsible habits, attitudes and lifestyles regarding alcohol and related issues, applications for membership in BACCHUS are available in the Kimmel Leadership Center and Student Fitness Center.
