SIUE tuition still lowest in state of Illinois

By Melanie Adams
Assistant News Editor

On Jan. 9 the Illinois Board of Higher Education (IBHE) endorsed tuition increases averaging 4.9 percent, which were adopted last fall by university governing boards. While the increase did affect the tuition at SIUE by 4.7 percent, SIUE still has the lowest tuition rates in the state of Illinois.

"The university is keeping tuition as low as possible, even with the increase," Samuel Smith, director of University News Service, said.

The four-year plan approved last year by the SIU Board of Trustees entailed an $86.40 increase in undergraduate tuition rates for a full-time SIUE student for Fiscal Year 1997, effective July 1, Smith said.

New Horizon team wins first place at SIUE College Bowl

By Brian Walsh
News Editor

Various teams from around SIUE's community gathered to put their minds to work in the College Bowl, which was held in the University Center on Friday.

Eight teams brainstormed through five-and-a-half hours of trivia questions sponsored by the UCB's Current Affairs organization, which is chaired by Sean Pohl.

"The College Bowl essentially is an opportunity for students to form teams and challenge one another using trivia-type questions, much like Jeopardy," Matt Feldman, advisor for the UCB, said.

At the end of the competition, prizes for first, second and third place were given out. Capturing the top position and $150 was the student government team, Heads of State.

Second place went down to the wire in the fifth and final round when the New Horizon team took home $100, besting the Eta Kappa Nu team. Eta

Woman injured as her car hits fountain in Belleville

• A 54-year-old woman hit the Veterans Memorial fountain in Belleville when she apparently failed to see the fountain and hit it with her Buick Skylark. She was cited for operation of an uninsured vehicle and was in fair condition at St. Elizabeth Hospital in Belleville Jan. 18.

Veterinarian performs first testicle implant on Rottweiler

• Veterinarian R.D. Holder performed the first testicle implant on a dog when he inserted FDA-approved Nueticles into a 110-pound Rottweiler. Holder invented the implants so that male dogs could still walk around with testicles after surgery.

Tuna Helper saves the day

• During an October robbery at Super Jim's Grocery in Chicago, employee Vincente Arriaga was shot by the robber from a distance of 20 feet. According to a report in the Chicago Sun-Times, the bullet barely broke Arriaga's skin because it was slowed as it passed through the 8-ounce box of Tuna Helper he was holding.

Robber leaves ID behind

• Reginald Currie, 36, was sentenced to prison for robbing the Hudson City Savings Bank, in New Jersey, of $1,500 in 1994. According to federal prosecutors, Currie pulled off the robbery by himself, but was captured within 24 hours because he accidentally left his ID behind in a bag at the bank.

Man hides $100 bills rolled in condoms in his stomach

• Carlos Trujillo was discovered at Kennedy Airport in New York with 189 $100 bills rolled up in condoms inside his stomach. However, officials were not certain why Trujillo had gone to the trouble, since he was also carrying about $60,000 more in his pockets and carry-on items.

Logan grad accused of lacing brownies

A John A. Logan College graduate has been accused of giving one of his instructors marijuana-laced brownies.

Kevin Klink, 35, of Murphysboro was charged in Williamson County with unlawful tampering of food, drugs or cosmetics and unlawful delivery of marijuana.

Klink gave two of the brownies to a part-time sociology teacher last May, authorities said.

The teacher did not get sick, but two other instructors she shared the brownies with had to be taken to the hospital.

Klink graduated from the college with an associate degree in May, said Robert Mees, vice president of instruction.

CBS rejects GOP request to air response day later

CBS became the second network to turn down a request from GOP leaders, who wanted their response to President Bill Clinton's State of the Union speech to air a day later in prime time.

The network considers it in the public's interest to air both the president's speech and the GOP response on Tuesday night, Andrew Heyward, president of CBS News, said Sunday.

ABC turned down the Republicans' request last week; NBC has yet to respond.

U.N. war crimes tribunal begins exhuming graves

Investigators for a U.N. war crimes tribunal have begun to unearth the skeletons of genocide victims from a mass grave outside a church in Kibuye.

Human rights groups believe that about 4,000 people seeking shelter in a Kibuye church were killed and their bodies stacked inside the building during the Rwandan genocide in 1994. The bodies were buried at several sites near the church, they say.

Tuition

The new $1,928 annual rate will still be the lowest in the state. Tuition for graduates will also have a new annual cost of $2,066.

Other institutions' annual rates for undergraduates include the following: Chicago State University, which is the second lowest with $2,022; Governors State with $2,028; Western with $2,040; Northeastern, also with $2,040; Eastern with $2,052; SIU at Carbondale with $2,550; Illinois State, with $2,846; Northern, also with $2,846 and the University of Illinois branches—Springfield, with $2,550; Chicago, with $2,870 and Urbana-Champaign with $3,150.

The IBHE approved assessments against universities where tuition and fee increases exceed three percent, reallocating the funds to the Illinois Student Assistance Commission's Monetary Award Program to cover the tuition and fee increases for financially needy students. At SIUE, the assessment is $110,500.

"Students will always feel that tuition is too high at the university they attend. However, the university has demonstrated their effort to keep tuition as low as possible," Smith said.

Sexual harassment case against President Clinton to proceed

(AP)—As if there weren't enough potential for friction between pillow mates in the White House, a federal court has delivered another reason to make life for the first couple interesting in a miserable sort of way.

The court ruled that a former Arkansas state employee, Paula Jones, can proceed with her sexual harassment case against the president. <None> Jones, who was a secretary in the Arkansas Statehouse, sued the president in 1994, contending that a state trooper took her to a hotel room when Clinton was governor. Clinton, it is alleged, said he wanted to meet her. Once there, she claims Clinton dropped his pants and made crude advances.

Charges involving sexual impropriety have dogged Clinton since he entered national politics.

The president was widely ridiculed when the charge surfaced almost two years ago. But the issue had subsided until (the) 2-to-1 ruling by an appellate court.

The president's lawyer will appeal. Clinton's lawyer argues that the president should be immune to civil lawsuits while in office for behavior that allegedly occurred before he was elected.

One would be surprised, however, if the Supreme Court rejected this rationale by the appellate court.

"The president, like all other government officials, is subject to the same laws that apply to all other members of our society. A sitting president is not immune from civil suits for his unofficial acts."

Hillary Rodham Clinton target of two dismissal investigations

(AP)—Hillary Rodham Clinton currently is the target of two congressional inquiries. The House is investigating the dismissals of seven travel office workers who were replaced with workers led by a cousin of the president. A Senate committee is looking into the collapse of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, which Rodham Clinton's Rose Law Firm represented.

The first lady has consistently downplayed her role in both issues, but documents have revealed that she apparently played a major part in each.

Rodham Clinton told Congress members last year that her role was "minimal" and that an associate, Richard Massey, did most of the work. But Massey recently testified that he can't recall much about the dealings, or any conversations he might have had with Rodham Clinton. Billing records that miraculously appeared (this month) show that Rodham Clinton sent Madison 22 separate bills for work she did on their behalf.

She also said she wasn't involved in the travel office mess that took place in 1993. The White House fired seven long-time employees, charging they had misused funds and asked the FBI to investigate them. After the allegations were found to be false, most of the fired employees were rehired and the Clintons were forced to make a public apology.

Memos submitted to the House committee revealed that the first lady essentially spearheaded the dismissals. David Watkins, who at the time was the White House director of administration, produced a memo stating that Rodham Clinton wanted the staffers fired.

"We knew that there would be hell to pay if we failed to take swift and decisive action in conformity with the first lady's wishes," the memo states. A chronology of events from former Chief of Staff Mack McLarty and notes from an interview with Fan Dozier, an employee of the Arkansas firm that replaced the fired workers, back up Watkins' beliefs.

So does the first lady simply have a bad memory, or has she been lying?

Only she knows for sure. But White House efforts to block the investigations have led many to believe that the Clintons must have something to hide.

Abraham Lincoln deserves holiday just like Dr. King

I would like to begin by saying that I do not consider myself a racist person. It's just the topic that I choose to write about might be taken the wrong way.

Last Monday we received a holiday in commemoration of the birth of slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. The question I raise is, "Why has the man who freed the slaves been overlooked?" The man of whom I speak is Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln was responsible for freeing the slaves 100 years before King's "I Have a Dream" speech.

How is it we honor the man who wasn't born in Illinois, yet the man who spent the majority of his life in this state receives no recognition. Isn't this the "Land of Lincoln?"

I'm not saying we need to do away with the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday. I just wonder why we don't give the same recognition to a man who started 100 years earlier.

SIUE fans continue to amaze

Amazing.

Remarkable.

Astonishing.

Those are only a few words I can think of off-hand to describe the turnout at Saturday's men's and women's basketball games at the Vadalabene Center.

To have any kind of crowd at a women's basketball game is simply amazing, considering that I don't think many people here know there is a women's basketball team. Hello, there is a women's team and they are pretty good. To hear a crowd cheering for them had to make them feel good and play a little harder.

And for those who didn't know there was a team, or just haven't decided to come out and support these ladies, you might want to check them out and jump on the Cougar bandwagon.

But actually, I am more amazed at the size of the crowd there to support SIUE's men's basketball team.

Quincy University is much hated by some SIUE fans—so I was sort of expecting a decent crowd, and not the kind of turnout it generated.

For the first time since I have been at SIUE, the Vadalabene Center actually felt like a home court.

Like Sports Editor Eli Savoie said, "It actually had a college basketball atmosphere."

Every three-point attempt by Jason Holmes had the crowd on the edge of their seats, ready to jump up when the ball went through the rim touching nothing but the bottom of the net.

Every hard-fought rebound and put-back by undersized Ronnie Henderson kept the crowd wondering how much higher he could jump.

Only those of you who attend these games can appreciate the sideline antics of Coach Margenthaler during every game.

Whether these teams win or lose is not really an issue. Sure, we would like them to win every game, but that's not going to happen. What we really need is for fans to continue to support these programs.

Keep it up SIUE. I hope we'll see you in the stands for the rest of this season.

Abortion demonstrators protest Clinton's threat to veto pending abortion bill

WASHINGTON (AP)

On the anniversary weekend of the Supreme Court decision that made most abortions legal, abortion opponents gathered outside the White House to protest President Clinton's threatened veto on a pending abortion bill.

"We are here to pray for the president as a Christian and to ask him to repent and protect America's children," Rev. Pat Mahoney of the Christian Defense Coalition told a group of 60 to 70 supporters Saturday.

Many in the group held signs that said "Abortion is Murder" and "Mr. Clinton, Do Not Mock God." A third sign, showing a fetus, said "Is This a Choice or a Child?"

The Senate last month voted to ban "partial-birth" abortions, a rarely used late-term procedure. White House officials have said Clinton, who supports abortion rights, will veto the measure.

Monday marks the 23rd anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision in the case of Roe vs. Wade, which declared the right to an abortion in the first three months of pregnancy as part of the constitutional right to privacy.

Louisiana's single-board plan draws black opposition

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP)—The new administration's newly unveiled plan to create a single governing board for Louisiana's public colleges and universities is drawing black opposition.

The plan described Friday by Gov. Mike Foster's higher education transition team would break up the nation's largest historically black college system, Southern University board member Patrick Fontenot said.

The plan would create a new Board of Governors to replace the state's four university boards—the Louisiana State University Board of Supervisors, the Southern University Board of Supervisors, the new University of Louisiana Board and the Board of Trustees for Higher Education.

The Board of Governors would, in effect, perform the same role as the Board of Trustees, which oversaw the other three boards. All of its members would be appointed by the governor.

Fontenot said he did not think the plan's architects understood the importance of the Southern University system to Louisiana's black population.

"I don't think the white community realizes what Southern has done for this state and the role that we can play in the future," Fontenot said.

Fontenot expressed concern that the single-board proposal also might have negative effects on the recent settlement in the long-running federal lawsuit over the desegregation of Louisiana's public colleges.

Late Friday, Foster said it is "too early to get excited" about the proposal, emphasizing that his transition team is merely brainstorming about ways to improve the current system of governing higher education.

"We're not going to push anything until we get some type of fairly good consensus—and those things are hard to get a consensus on," Foster said.

Foster said he had instructed the transition team not to protect any sacred cows in their efforts to improve the present system.

"If you started from scratch, you would not come up with a system that looks like what we have now—and so I'm telling them to look at everything," Foster said.

Under the single-board plan outlined Friday by New Orleans developer and LSU board member Roger Ogden, the state's colleges would be split into four categories—research, doctorate, comprehensive master's and community colleges.

LSU, LSU Law School, LSU Medical Center and the LSU Agricultural Center would occupy the research category, as the state's flagship institution.

A second class would include Southern University at Baton Rouge, the Southern University Law Center, the University of Southwestern Louisiana, the University of New Orleans—now part of the LSU system—and Louisiana Tech.

All of the state's other four-year colleges, including Southern University at New Orleans, would be in the third category, with the state's community colleges comprising the final classification.

Ogden's proposal, which is to be fine-tuned over the next two weeks before it is presented to the governor, calls for all the members of the board to be appointed at-large and to serve eight- to 10-year terms.

State Higher Education Commissioner Larry Crain said Friday that he prefers Ogden's single-board plan to another proposal, suggested last week by the governor's chief of staff, that would have abolished the state Board of Regents.

That proposal would have created one board to govern LSU, the LSU Law Center, the LSU Agricultural Center and the Medical Center; a second board to govern Southern University's Baton Rouge campus, along with its law center and agricultural center; and a third board to govern all other state universities.

The problem with the chief of staff's proposal was that it did not provide any board to coordinate college programs and higher education in general, Crain said.

Any major changes in the state's current four-board structure would require a constitutional amendment.

Rep. Kip Holden, D-Baton Rouge, whose district includes Southern's main campus in Baton Rouge, said he did not like the sound of the plan. "It would cause a lot of confusion as people within the university system jockey to get the upper hand," he said.

College newspaper reporter wants to see lawmakers' e-mail

DENVER (AP)—A college newspaper reporter has sent letters to Gov. Roy Romer and state Sen. Charles Duke asking to see their e-mail messages sent for the first 16 days of 1996.

Becky O'Guin, a journalism student at Metro State College of Denver, cited the Colorado Open Records law in her requests. O'Guin writes for the Capitol Reporter, a student newspaper that covers the legislature.

Duke, R-Monument, said he has always complied with open records laws, but he was taken aback by the request to turn over his electronic messages from Jan. 1-16.

"I'm disturbed by it," Duke said.

Romer's press secretary, Jim Carpenter, said his office is "looking at all the issues, all the options."

Lawmakers said Friday they would get a legal opinion on whether they must disclose their electronic messages, and they may pass legislation to make sure their messages have some protection of privacy.

A bill by Sen. Paul Weissmann, R-Louisville, to make e-mail as privileged as telephone conversations died in a Senate committee, but a somewhat stronger bill still rests in the House.

Senate Majority Leader Jeff Wells, R-Colorado Springs, said he believes e-mail is privileged information unless it is specifically identified as public information under existing law.

But O'Guin is not backing down, saying she is just trying to find out how much public business is conducted through e-mail.

"If they're using e-mail to send memos back and forth discussing public business, I see that as public record," she said. "Most of them don't (have e-mail), but about 30 people have software that allows them to send e-mail back and forth."

Court says college newspaper must turn over photos of fracas

ST. PAUL (AP)—The University of Minnesota student newspaper must turn over unpublished photographs to a judge in a pending criminal case, the Minnesota Court of Appeals has ruled.

The 2-1 ruling issued Friday reiterates an earlier Court of Appeals ruling and rejects arguments that media freedoms are threatened by law enforcement subpoenas for unpublished information gathered by journalists.

The Minnesota Daily's attorney, Marshall H. Tanick, said the newspaper may appeal to the state Supreme Court.

The earlier ruling said neither state law nor the Constitution protects media organizations from court orders to turn over unpublished pictures for judges to inspect in criminal cases.

Friday's ruling compels the newspaper to turn over the photographs even though the trial judge who initially requested them has since changed his mind.

Daily editor Michelle Ames said she will go to jail before handing over the pictures.

"I can only say that we are all sad about this," said Ames, 26. "But our position has not changed and will not change."

Hennepin County District Judge John Stanoch had requested to review the photos privately in his chambers to determine whether they should be entered into evidence in a criminal case stemming from a fight at the university.

In December, Stanoch reversed his position, ruling that the Daily staff was within its rights to refuse the Hennepin County attorney's demand to turn over the unpublished photographs.

But the Court of Appeals on Friday said Stanoch had no authority to modify its earlier ruling ordering the Daily to turn over the pictures.

The pictures were taken during a clash in October 1993 between a group called the Progressive Students' Organization and a man named Daniel Simmer.

Authorities charged Kieran Knutson with two felony counts of assault for allegedly striking Simmer. Witnesses gave conflicting accounts as to whether Simmer was wearing brass knuckles at the time—an issue that became central to Knutson's claim of self-defense.

Assistant Hennepin County Attorney Paul Scoggin, who handled the appeal, said the court properly balanced competing interests.

"We have to balance the state's interest in trying to figure out whether a crime occurred and journalists' equally legitimate interest in protecting unpublished information," he said.

He said the decision should be made on a case-by-case basis, and that in some cases the county attorney's office would not support asking for unpublished information.

The Daily has argued that instead of seeking the unpublished pictures, prosecutors should interview the many witnesses to the fight.

"This was a public rally that was attended by hundreds of people," Ames said. "With that amount of individuals, they should have enough eyewitness accounts to provide the information they need without co-opting news organizations."

Scoggin said the witnesses were not disinterested parties, unlike the Daily photographer.

Tanick argued that media organizations have privilege to resist subpoenas from law enforcement agencies seeking unpublished information. News media argue that such subpoenas can cause reporters to be viewed as an arm of the law, which has a "chilling effect" on news-gathering and therefore restricts freedom of expression.

Keiran's trial currently is under way.

Scoggin said the prosecution likely will ask the judge to review the pictures Monday before it rests its case. He said prosecutors probably would recommend that the judge hold the newspaper in contempt if it fails to produce the photos.

The prosecution favors a fine against the newspaper itself rather than incarceration for any student or editor if found in contempt, Scoggin said.

Hallucinogen is being looked at as cure for addiction

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP)—In the 1960s, a man took a new drug at a party hoping to get high.

Instead, Howard Lotsof said he took ibogaine and became "cured" of his addiction. He's dedicated his life to getting the illegal drug approved as a treatment for addicts.

The controversial drug has drawn skepticism from the government and has been slow in being developed into an approved treatment for addicts in the United States.

Now, an Albany Medical College professor and a University of Vermont chemist, who have developed a derivative that they claim eliminates some of the drug's dangerous side effects, say they might be close.

The natural hallucinogen taken from shrubs in Africa could someday cure addictions to heroin, cocaine and even nicotine and alcohol, according to its proponents.

"It started out as something very quirky," said Stanley D. Glick, the chairman of the department of Pharmacology and Neuroscience at Albany Med.

"I was intrigued mainly by the claim he (Lotsof) made that if you take the drug once or maybe two or three times and then you've lost your craving for drugs for months, years, forever ... the claim was more outrageous even than any other," Glick said in his laboratory.

"I thought I'd give it to a few rats—rats that were trained to self administer morphine," he said. "And, lo and behold, it decreased morphine self-administration and we became more interested in it."

The problem was that in rats it produced tremors, and at high doses, killed their brain cells.

After years of research, Glick and Martin Kuehne of the University of Vermont have found a derivative of ibogaine that they say suppresses the craving for drugs, but doesn't produce tremors. Their hope is that this will help develop a less toxic treatment.

Kuehne said the derivative may help dispel some of the fears that skeptics have of ibogaine.

"The compounds were free from these bizarre effects," Kuehne said.

Kuehne said he's hopeful that tests on humans could begin this year. But he did point out that a person would really have to want to quit. "If they want to not be addicted, I think it could be a complete cure."

People seeking treatment would undergo an 18-hour ordeal in a hospital after taking a pill containing the derivative of ibogaine, Glick said.

Some people who have experienced the treatment describe it as watching a movie about their lives.

Lotsof said they see repressed memories, then there's a cognitive evaluation of one's life and then all "psycho-activity" is reduced.

Lotsof said the results often cause narcotic withdrawal and allows one to come to terms with his or her narcotic abuse and quit.

Ibogaine appears to inhibit dopamine, the neurotransmitter that is released by morphine, heroin or cocaine creating euphoric feelings.

"It's no longer a lark," Glick said. "If I can stop one individual from using cocaine or heroin, I'd feel pretty good," Glick said.

An advisory panel told the Food and Drug Administration in 1993 that it should go ahead and allow human trials on a case-by-case basis.

At the University of Miami, limited tests on humans to determine the safety of ibogaine are being conducted.

Lotsof has conducted his own experiments with the drug on humans out of the country, sometimes in hotels and sometimes with grave results.

"Along the way, there's been a few deaths," said Dr. Alan I. Trachtenberg, a medical officer with the National Institute on Drug Abuse. While what caused two deaths cannot be directly linked to ibogaine, it has Trachtenberg worried.

"It gets them skittish," Lotsof said of the deaths.

The testing outside the United States is now done in hospitals and the screening for candidates is more intense, he said.

Trachtenberg said the drug is used in Gabon, a West African nation, where it's believed that by chewing the root of Tabernanthe iboga, from which ibogaine is derived, one can speak with ancestors. Trachtenberg said the person chewing the root occasionally ends up dying.

Still, Trachtenberg said there isn't enough information yet that proves ibogaine is that useful or promising.

"There's a very long way to go," Trachtenberg said.

"It may or may not be an important drug," Trachtenberg said. "True believers claim it's a very important drug."

"When someone comes along and says we can cure addiction, you have to have a healthy dose of skepticism. You have to be suspicious, not to say this isn't going to happen."

Sexual Assault Victims
First is seeking qualified men and women to serve as Victim Advocates.

After successfully completing a 40-hour training program, advocates provide support and assistance to children, adolescents and adults healing from the trauma of sexual violence. Training is scheduled to begin on Jan. 30 in Collinsville.

Advocates must be sensitive, caring and non-judgmental. Previous training in counseling, psychology, social work or corrections is helpful but not necessary to be considered for training.

Advocates must be highly responsible and reliable. A commitment to eliminating all forms of oppression and discrimination is essential. Survivors of sexual assault and persons of diversity are encouraged to volunteer. A one-year commitment and willingness to be on call at night are required.

To apply for the training program or for more information, please call Advocacy Coordinator Maggie Corbin or Executive Director Susan Sticha at (618)344-0609.

Family of SIUE graduates sets up scholarship in memory of their mother

By Danette Watt
Lifestyle Reporter

Martha Huckelberry was a recently divorced mother of seven in 1970 when she realized she needed to go back to school.

With only a high school education, she knew she needed a degree if she were to better her family's circumstances.

After years of struggle and hard work, she graduated in 1976 with a major in human services and psychology.

Last August, Barbara Huckelberry Schneider followed in the footsteps of her mother and six siblings, graduating with a degree in education.

Family members flew in from as far as California and Kentucky to see Schneider graduate.

Unfortunately, Martha Huckelberry did not live to see the ceremony; she died of a stroke in December 1994.

To honor her mother's firm belief in and struggle for an education, Tammy Geiger decided to establish a scholarship for single parents.

Geiger, the youngest of Martha Huckelberry's children, was in grade school when her mother graduated. She said she was one of two of the seven children who continued on to college after high school. The other five were married before they went back to school and of those five, four were divorced and raising children.

"My mother was really special—a very loving and very giving person. She helped us all get through school, either financially or by babysitting our children," Geiger said.

After Huckelberry's death, an insurance policy was divided among the seven. Geiger planned to start an education fund for her six-month-old daughter but changed her mind.

"I saw a plaque that said, 'In memory of ...' and decided I wanted to give a little bit back (to SIUE). We agreed to start an endowment for single parents, knowing how hard it was for our mother and some of us," Geiger said.

The Martha Huckelberry Memorial Grant for Single Parents, a $300 award, was presented to Pamela Blackorby last November.

Geiger said while the award is small, she hopes to add to the endowment as time goes on.

"One thing my mom would say is that that is a lot of money for someone who is a single parent. Anything that can go toward child care, transportation, books—anything—is a help when you're a single parent," Geiger said.

President Belck congratulates Barbara Huckelberry Schneider after summer commencement ceremonies. Schneider was the last of Martha Huckelberry's children to graduate from SIUE. The family has set up a scholarship in Huckelberry's name.

Quincy's Taron Pickett cuts off Jason Holmes' path to the basket during Saturday night's contest. Holmes poured in a season high 38 points, but the Cougars fell 112-110 in double overtime.

Cougars come up short in double overtime thriller

Holmes' 38 not enough to overcome Waggoner's heroics

By Eli Savoie
Sports Editor

Saturday night's men's basketball game between SIUE and Quincy had almost everything that can be asked for out of a college basketball game. It had a pep-band playing, a rowdy crowd, buzzer-beating shots and it even had two overtime periods.

Unfortunately though, it did not have a happy ending for the Cougars.

Quincy's Andy Waggoner hit an 18-foot jumper with less than a second to play in the second overtime to give the Hawks a 112-110 victory over the Cougars in front of a crowd of nearly 1,300 people at the Vadalabene Center.

The dramatic game winning shot was Waggoner's second big shot of the night.

At the end of the first overtime, with Quincy trailing 104-101, he hit a leaning three-point shot over a defender with only 4.9 seconds on the clock to snatch victory from the Cougars and force the second overtime where he pulled the second trick out of his bag.

The Cougars were paced by junior guard Jason Holmes who scored a game high 38 points, including 18 in the second half to lead the Cougars back from a 54-41 halftime deficit and eventually force the extra stanzas.

"We just didn't come out ready to play in the first half," Cougar Head coach Jack Margenthaler said looking exhausted after the emotional battle his team had fought. "In the second half and through the overtimes we played with much more intensity...especially on the defensive end."

Margenthaler added that one key to getting back into the game was that his team looked more for the inside game in the second half instead of settling for the outside shot and that, in turn, opened up the outside game a little more to allow Holmes some open shots.

When Holmes got those open shots, he was hitting many of them on the way to his season high point total. Margenthaler commented that it was one of Holmes best shooting performances of the year.

Holmes however, was not the only offensive weapon for the Cougars as three other players reached double figures. Senior center Ronnie Henderson led the inside attack that Margenthaler talked about as he tallied 22 points even while facing defenders that were five or six inches taller than himself.

Tim Holloway and Nathan Kreke were the other Cougars to tally double figures scoring 14 and 12 points respectively. Chris Harris led the SIUE attack on the boards as he hauled in 11 caroms before fouling out.

Quincy was led by center Ryan Brown with 35 points and 13 rebounds. The hero Waggoner finished with 21 points and 6 assists.

Although disappointed with the loss, Margenthaler seemed proud of the effort his team gave in the second half and overtime.

"They (Quincy) are a very good basketball team. They have good size and strength and they're quick," Margenthaler said. "We gave everything we could, but just came up a little short."

Big second half helps SIUE roll by Quincy

By Brett Licata
Sports Reporter

Even though their contest against Oakland City on Thursday was canceled because of icy weather conditions, the SIUE Lady Cougars were heating the Vadalabene Center court up with a 70-59 victory over Quincy on Saturday evening.

This Great Lakes Valley Conference win took their overall record to 11-4 and improved their GLVC record to 6-3.

The Cougars started out flat in the first half falling victim to a stifling Quincy defense. Head coach Wendy Hedberg credited the opposing squad for a fine display of intimidation.

Down ten points at halftime, coach Hedberg told her Cougars to pick up their intensity level in the second half and they responded.

"We came out and pressed to kind of get us moving a little bit. We got back the ten point deficit that we were down and just went from there," Hedberg said.

While shooting over 50 percent in the second half, the Cougars' perimeter defense came together. They outscored Quincy 45-24 in the final half. The Cougars tried to mix up their defenses to keep the opposition off balance.

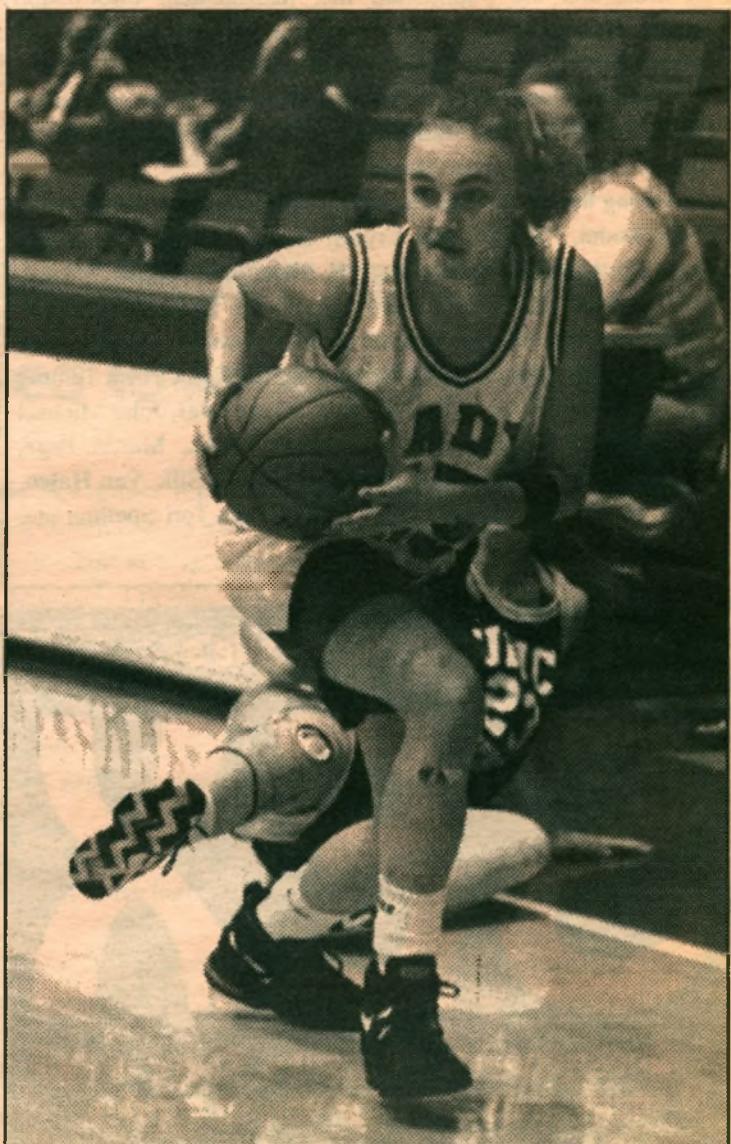

"We've been struggling lately with post defense. We tried to work on switching them up a little bit," Hedberg said.

The full-court pressure gave the Ladies the turnovers they needed to rally back for the victory.

Similar to their other games this season, there was a wide variety of contributors to the Lady Cougar attack. Terri Evans led the Cougars with 19 points and 5 steals. Kim Lowe and Alicia Harkins threw in 16 and 15 points respectively. Amy Tuetken added 13 points with 5 steals and 8 rebounds.

Next up for the Lady Cougars is a battle with Bellarmine, who have won seven in a row and are tied for the number one spot in the GLVC.

The game is set to tip-off at 5:30 p.m., Thursday night in the Vadalabene Center.

Sophomore Leslie Phillips comes away with the ball against Quincy Saturday night at the V.C.. SIUE won the game 70-59.

Don't forget the SIUE intramural program's "Ladies Night" coming up soon. The date for the event has been changed from Monday, Jan. 29 to the following Monday (Feb. 5).

Also, don't miss all the exciting action of the intramural basketball season beginning tonight and continuing every Tuesday and Thursday night. The first games tip-off at 7 p.m.
