Provost show exhibits Sill's artistic side

BY KARA WOLF LIFESTYLE STRINGER

exhibition photographs by Provost David Sill shows his years of involvement in the artistic experiences promoted by SIUE.

Sill, who has served as chairman of the Theater and Dance Department and dean of Fine Art and Communications, is exhibiting photographs at the New Wagner Art Gallery in the Art and Design Building. The show runs through Oct. 30.

His images, taken during sabbatical, are carefully constructed to focus on senses and places. His work shows a deep feeling for the places he has visited. He senses them through sight, sound and smell, remembering the sense of these places in his dreams. His collection of sabbatical photographs comes from two very different places: local, rural Illinois and Lewes, Del.

He has used realistic focus to present unique experiences through mundane objects. Images of trees and gravestones become experienced places through the different angles from which he captures his scenes. He has stressed, however, that in following realistic tradition, his images were created by "found design," implicating his innate reliance on symmetry and angles as well as other formal elements of design.

Sill has structured his responses to places in layers, expressing many viewpoints by employing elements of distance and scale.

Mono is stalking the campus

BY STEPHEN WHITE LIFESTYLE STRINGER

According to Health Services, the Epstein-Barr virus, which is known for its role in causing infectious mononucleosis, is alive and well at SIUE.

During the past month, several students experienced fatigue, headaches, loss of appetite, sore throats, tonsillar swelling and enlarged lymph nodes. Doctors believe that excessive stress can play a role in the weakening of the immune system, enabling the virus to initiate mono.

This would seem to make sense in light of the evidence. Every year, Health Services reports more cases of mono during the beginning of each semester. These are characteristically stressful periods for college students.

estimated that It is approximately 50 percent of students have had mono by the time they enroll in college. Mononucleosis is highly contagious, though it rarely causes serious, life-threatening complications. Most cases of mono usually disappear in two to four weeks, but there is no known cure.

Health Services warns that students can contract the disease through any type of bodily fluid.

Parking tickets are either $10 or $15 fines, depending on the offense. Tickets must be paid within five working days to avoid a one-time penalty of $5. Tickets can be appealed, but only after they have been paid.

The Parking and Traffic Committee, which is made up of 12 voting members — four students, four faculty and four staff members — as well as ex officio members, decide how the revenue is spent. The money is used for paying Parking Service employee wages, lighting and parking lot maintenance and building new parking lots.

Michael Schultz, director of SIUE University Housing, said, "[Anderson] wanted to be remembered for his commitment to God and his faith. He wanted to be remembered as a strong range from $40 for evening stickers to $110 for multivehicle sets

If a sticker is damaged or lost, it must be replaced. The cost to replace a sticker is only $1, but an affidavit must be signed, stating that the original sticker was lost or destroyed.

And, as the parking regulations state, "Scrapings of the entire original decal must be presented" to get a new sticker.

Bob Vanzo, director of administrative services, is in charge of Parking Services. He invites people with constructive suggestions or problems to contact him at 650-2536.

Since many diseases can mimic the effects of mono, it's important for those who think they might have the disease to get a blood test.

Because mononucleosis is caused by a virus, antibiotics are of no help against the disease. Treatment of mono is "symptomatic," meaning that the symptoms rather than the cause are treated. Acetaminophen is commonly used for pain instead of aspirin because the latter has been associated with Reye's Syndrome in some cases of mono.

If you think you might have mononucleosis, do not panic. Most cases go away on their own, but seek medical help immediately. Try to cover your nose with a tissue while sneezing, refrain from kissing and sex and wash your hands frequently.

little history lesson

What are you?

Why do people ask me that instead of "who are you?" I suppose it's because "what are you" is easier to answer. Or is it? Someone once got upset with me for saying I was mixed with slave master. In high school that was my response when people asked me what I was. It was Danielle a very harsh way of saying it, but it was the truth. On both sides of my family the results of my mixed ancestry were because of slavery and rape. I don't think my grandmother would lie about things like that.

As I was growing up, many of my friends in elementary school went to great lengths to explain how they were not completely black. That didn't make much sense to me. I knew I was black and was quite comfortable with it. I didn't understand why other third-graders were so set on telling me that they were mixed with Cherokee. And everyone always said Cherokee, as if that was the Native American group of choice. But none of them knew anything about the Cherokee, or what it is to be Cherokee. They didn't know "who" the Cherokee were, they just liked to say it, as if to say, "I'm black but I have this in me that makes me special and different from you regular black people."

Often I would think how I could claim the same thing. But why? My mother's grandmother was part Native American, but our family has no knowledge of what tribe or how far the blood line went. It seemed a little silly to me to go around claiming something I knew very

This continued as I grew older, but no one ever seemed to learn "who" the Cherokees are. They didn't learn who any of the Native American tribes are. For many, they were simply names to just flash when appropriate. But does anyone know what it really is to be Cherokee? Does anyone know how when America was expanding, the Cherokee chose to try to assimilate into the emerging Eurocentric culture, only to still lose their land even after winning a Supreme Court case to keep it? When Chief Justice John Marshall told President Andrew Jackson the Cherokees had sole legal rights to their land, Jackson told Marshall to enforce the ruling himself because as president, he intended to ignore it. The Cherokees were eventually forced off their land to move westward in what became the "Trail of Few people I would talk to who claimed this heritage knew anything of its culture before or after the Cherokee decided to assimilate. But these same people would be furious when they'd see white performers and teens appropriating black culture and music, without acknowledging the realities of black life. Couldn't they see how Cherokees would take it the same way?

Many African-Americans have Native American ancestry just as many have European ancestry. I knew plenty of black people with Irish last names who liked to tell me how they were part Irish. But they have never seen Ireland and know nothing about the Irish outside of St. Patrick's Day and Lucky Charms cereal. My family has been in this country for more than five generations. Within that, there was plenty of time for some playing around in the family gene pool. Who knows what type of blood is swimming in my veins?

Therefore, "what are you?" doesn't tell a person anything. Yet, if you ask people who they are and deal with them from that standpoint, you learn so much more. If people asked me who I was, I could describe the history and culture that make me who I am. "What are you?" only covers the biological, which tells less than half the story. I am black, but what is black? Does it really matter if I'm a quarter this or two parts of that? Does it matter if I'm Cherokee or not? Black is who I am and what I am at the same time. I was born to black parents, then raised in an African-American culture. This has much more to do with who I am, rather than what I am.

'What' black is, is a color. "Who" black is, is a culture, a people and an emotion. People need to start learning who people are and stop asking what they are. This way you can learn and understand far greater than you could just knowing what someone is.

The Parking Paradox

I drive my car to school and I have an SIU parking sticker on my back window. The sticker allows me to park in P lots. This is difficult because the P lots are always full. So I cruise back and forth along the aisles. I inch around pickup trucks with their rear ends sticking out until I reach the last row in the lot. I begin to panic because class starts in 20 minutes and I still face the half-mile walk to the

Should I pull up on a grassy knoll and pretend my car is a bush? Should I drive boldly into the quad circle disguising my car as a bus? The roof of my car is not equipped with flashing destination signals and someone might notice, or worse, hand me a transfer and expect a ride to Edwardsville. Besides, I'm not in

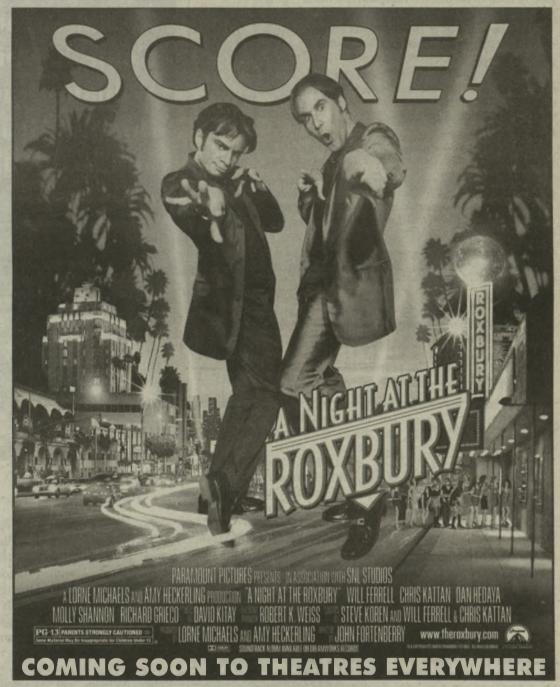

So I creep up and down the aisles again. I see tail lights flicker. Someone is backing out and I find a space.

A question comes to mind: Did the drivers in the occupied spaces arrive at 4 a.m. or have they been there since last semester?

There is a solution to my problem: I plan to lease one of those giant, yellow maintenance vehicles, the ones used all over campus that dig holes and cut grass. I shall drive through the grounds past the trees and park next to my building. I shall string yellow tape, set out cones and go new king of swing. At least the deluge of reports about the whole Clinton "Who-reallygives-a-rat's-ass-Gate" has started to taper off a bit. You'd think the man was in cahoots with O.J., he was getting so much press. Now, we've got mass-destruction like Hurricane Georges to dominate the news pages. No, not as exciting, because there's no sex involved.

I'm sure, two or three weeks from now when the wind has calmed, the stench of the Bill's cigar smoke will again waft through our television sets, thanks to the Rathers and Brokaws out there.

But I think I have a solution for Bill. He should go out and rent a fine little flick called "Wag the Dog" from the local Video Hutt and tune in.

I don't think he should create a war, necessarily, like DeNiro and Hoffman did in the film. I think he should use it as a starting ground and bomb the hell out of somebody who isn't expecting it right now — like Germany!

Sure, why not? He could go on the air and say, "My fellow Americans, something just didn't No one else can put his sordid sit right in my gut about those story on the back burner like the wily Germans. I don't think they got their just desserts after WWII. So, I bombed them back to the Stone Age."

> Who's gonna argue with him about that? Show some anti-Nazi propaganda. Have Bill punch through a poster with Hitler's face on it, and he's back in business. Then, let the Germans rebuild. They've done it before. Besides, what's been their greatest contribution to our country lately, those awful new Volkswagens? They need a little slap in the face. Keeps them from getting too cocky.

BY COREY STULCE WRITER AT LARGE

There are a few really great movie romance moments: the plane scene at the end of "Casablanca" with Ingrid Bergman and Humphrey Bogart; the "Buffalo Gals" scene in "It's a Wonderful Life" with Jimmy Stewart and Donna Reed; and now the redemption scene in "What Dreams May Come" with Robin Williams and Annabella

The last film is not necessarily destined to become a classic like the other two, but it certainly has merit considering the lack of really good romances lately.

The film is based on the book by Richard Matheson, and was considered unfilmable decades since the bulk of the story takes place in the afterlife.

The story involves two soul mates, Williams and Sciorra, who go through some tumultuous times.

Their two children are killed in a horrendous car accident, and then four years later Williams is also killed trying to save a life.

Williams still feels a bond with his wife after his death, and after she succumbs to suicide, he begins a quest to save her from her own personal hell.

The film becomes an artlover's dream after the afterlife begins. Through amazing computerized technology, Digital Domain has created the most vast visions of heaven and hell ever seen on screen.

Unfortunately, [lush backgrounds and technical wizardry overshadow the story a bit. The scenery takes over, especially during the visit to hell, and we start to lose track of the importance of the story.

Williams and Sciorra separated by death. But William's afterlife guide, played by Cuba Gooding Jr. is a little soft. Like his translucent body in the film, his role never really materializes.

Overall, the message of love conquering all and the wonderful set design and special effects make this a film anyone capable of love should not miss.

Top: Robin Williams runs through hell to fine find his wife. Bottom: Annabella Sciorra performances as and Robin Williams star in "What Dreams lovers May Come."

SIUE women's soccer coach Brian Korbesmeyer recorded his 100th victory Sunday with a 2-1 win over Indianapolis.

Not a bad weekend for the .First, he plays a heck of a game against No. 3 nationallyranked St. Joseph's.

And then he gets his team out the next day, ready to take on Indianapolis to mark his 100th victory.

Congratulations, coach.

Home runs

Home runs are only slightly up as a whole in Major League Baseball this past season compared to the 1997 season.

Reports say the majority of the home run increase is due to the Cardinal bullpen.

Andrea Addotta (No. 8) dribbles through a St. Joseph's player in Saturday's 2-2 tie. The Cougars defeated Indianapolis 2-1 on Sunday to improve their record of 4-1-1 and grab a GLVC mark of 3-0-1.

BY BRETT LICATA SPORTS WRITER

For two years it has been the same old story. The SIUE women's soccer Cougars play their hearts out, but just can't stop St. Joseph's College.

It looked like another year of falling short to St. Joseph's, which was riding a seven-game winning streak going into Saturday's contest, but the relentless Cougars were out to surprise everyone.

SIUE, the 23rd-ranked team in the country, stormed back after going down a goal 30 minutes into the first half to tie the nation's No. 3 ranked team 2-2.

Andrea Addotta of St. Peters, Mo. gave the Cougars a short-lived 1-0 lead in the 11th minute on a feed from junior Kristi

Five minutes later, St. Joseph's Leslie Hilbert put her team on the board as she beat SIUE goalkeeper Shannon Roth to tie the game 1-1

The Great Lakes Valley Conference goal-scoring leader, Mary Reid, netted the go-ahead goal for St. Joseph's at the 29:04 mark.

In the past, SIUE would have folded after losing a lead to St. Joseph's, but Karin Tighe of St. Louis wanted to send a message that SIUE wasn't intimidated.

Tighe found the back of the net in the 41st minute to tie the game 2-2 on a pass from freshman Leslie Henigman.

Sosa missed chance for immortality _ by Andy Korbesmeyer

Well, the baseball season is over for the St. Louis Cardinals and Mark McGwire is burying himself on the beaches of Southern California trying to hide from reporters. Meanwhile, the Chicago Cubs will be in the postseason.

Due to the apathetic attitude toward sports here on campus, I thought I'd open up this can of worms to see if anyone has a reaction.

Sammy Sosa would have rather set the home run record than make the playoffs.

I respect Sosa for saying all the right things. He can't come out and say that, in a team game like baseball, he is more concerned about personal stats than the success of his team. But let's be honest.

Mark McGwire played for a team that hovered around .500 for the season, but now McGwire's name will forever be mentioned along with Ruth, Mantle, Maris and Aaron.

Each season, many teams have a chance to make the playoffs, but the chances of shattering the home run record don't come up that often. McGwire earned himself a place in history. Sosa earned himself a chance to lose three games to the Atlanta Braves.

This home run derby was a two-man race and McGwire left Sosa in his dust on the last two days. Cardinal fans will be able to relish the memories of what we saw for years to come. I almost feel bad for the Cubs fans who are so excited because by the end of the weekend they will be just another victim of the best organization of the 1990s and one of the best pitching staffs ever. Hey, didn't Greg Maddux used to play for the Cubs?

And while I've got the attention of Chicago fans, thanks again for Lou Brock.

Other News ...

- Roger Clemens deserves the Cy Young ... again.

— St. Louis should watch two promising youngsters: J. D. Drew of the Cardinals and Marty Reasone of the Blues. Both could lead their organizations into the next decade.

After a relatively high-scoring first half, neither team could score in the second half or two overtime periods. SIUE kept the pressure on by outshooting St. Joseph's 25-16, but the game ended with a 2-2 score.

The Cougars picked up their third conference win of the season against the University of Indianapolis Sunday.

Megan Beagles scored her first two goals of the season in the 29th and 49th minutes to help her team edge Indianapolis 2-1.

Senior Janece Friederich continues to lead SIUE offensively with eight goals and 18 points after six games. By scoring seven goals in two games a couple of weekends ago, Friederich was named the GLVC Player of the Week on Sept. 21.

The Cougars will face another test when they take on undefeated Northern Kentucky University this Saturday in Highland Heights, Ky.

Northern Kentucky is coming off an upset victory over Truman State last weekend where freshman Betsy Moore scored twice and was awarded this week's GLVC Player of the Week honor.

SIUE student Adlfinger named St. Louis bodybuilding champ

BY BRIAN ANDERSON

FOR THE ALESTLE

At only 21 years of age, Dave Adlfinger is adding to his list of bodybuilding accomplishments. Adlfinger was named Mr. St. Louis last weekend after a unanimous decision from all seven judges, winning his middle-weight division and the overall vote.

For his achievements Adlfinger received two oversized metal-sculpted trophies and a $500 gold ring.

But Adlfinger believes his Mr. St. Louis achievement is just a beginning.

Adlfinger said that he is about six years from being at the peak bodybuilder's age.

"At only 21, I am always the youngest in my division," Adlfinger said. "This is a big win for me, not only as a sport, but also as a sign that with consistent discipline, knowledge and determination, the sky is the limit.

"Thank you all for coming to the show and supporting me. It truly means a lot," Adlfinger said.

Adlfinger plans to compete nationally in April.

— Would the Illinois football team now be scared to play Prairie View A & M?

— George Foreman and Larry Holmes will be a combined 99 years old when their next bout comes around.

— The Lady Cougars soccer team salvaged a 2-2 tie against St Joseph's College last weekend. That was a good score against a very good team.

— The volleyball team got a huge win last weekend over Northern Kentucky University. The ladies have three important conference games at home this weekend and could use your support. Lindsay Rust could be the best all-around player in the short history of Cougar Volleyball.

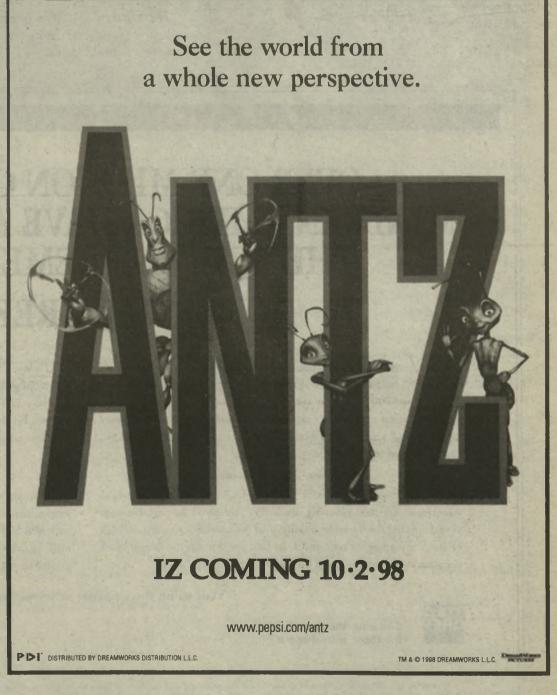

— Congratulations to SIUE women's soccer coach Brian Korbesmeyer who notched his 100th career victory on Sunday.
